Préface

Voici le tome V du LIMC (Lexicon Iconographicum Mythologiae Classicae). Comme ses prédécesseurs, il se présente avec le même habit vert, la même typographie parfaite et la même qualité des illustrations. Pourtant les années passent; des collaborateurs s'en vont; d'autres arrivent; heureusement le comité de rédaction demeure inchangé, fidèle aux normes qu'il s'est à lui-même fixées. Que l'on ne pense pas pour autant que tout est facile; bien loin de là. Chaque jour apporte son lot de difficultés nouvelles et souvent imprévues. Mais la confiance de la communauté scientifique dans son ensemble nous apporte la confirmation de la valeur de l'entreprise et nous assure la force de poursuivre une action qui chaque jour obtient l'aveu de nouveaux adhérents.

Cette grande publication internationale constitue toujours un exemple de collaboration. Il s'en faut pourtant que les temps soient toujours favorables. Rien n'aurait été possible sans l'apport de la Fondation Getty. Grâce à elle, les lenteurs administratives, les défaillances financières de certains partenaires peuvent être surmontées. Ainsi, nous pouvons aller avec confiance vers l'achèvement de l'œuvre.

Mais, il faut dire, encore une fois, que la publication est avant tout l'œuvre d'une personne qui s'y est dévouée, corps et âme, jour et nuit, d'un continent à l'autre. C'est, assurément, conquête personnelle de Madame Lilly Kahil, ce sera, à n'en pas douter, le grand exploit de sa vie que d'avoir vaincu tous les obstacles pour apporter au monde scientifique la bible iconographique du XXI<sup>ème</sup> siècle.

A ce titre, elle méritera la reconnaissance de tous les savants qui se consacreront à l'étude toujours actuelle de l'antiquité classique et de ses suites. Cette collection apportera témoignage, non seulement d'une science incomparable, mais encore d'une foi, d'une ferveur, que l'on ne peut qu'admirer. Aussi, le Président de la Fondation voudrait ici marquer son admiration et sa gratitude à celle qui est l'âme du LIMC et dire que, bien au delà des honneurs académiques et universitaires, Madame Kahil aura la gloire de devenir un nom commun. Le LIMC, c'est elle, et je souhaite qu'on puisse bientôt dire «le Kahil» comme on dit «le Bailly» ou «le Roscher». C'est le vœu que forme au terme de son mandat le Président en sachant déjà que le monde entier l'approuve.

JEAN POUILLOUX
Président du Conseil de la Fondation pour le
Lexicon Iconographicum Mythologiae Classicae

Avant-propos

Le LIMC, à nouveau, a pu tenir ses promesses puisque le tome V paraît en automne 1990. Nous avons à présent dépassé la moitié de la publication: il est en effet prévu que toutes les rubriques, qui n'ont pas encore été traitées ainsi que les suppléments pourront être intégrés dans les trois derniers volumes. C'est une grande joie pour nous d'avoir pu ainsi tenir nos promesses à l'égard de la communauté internationale qui veut bien continuer à soutenir nos efforts et accorder une aide financière de plus en plus difficile à trouver. Régulièrement cette aide est complétée par les fonds que nous accorde généreusement le John Paul Getty Trust, qui collabore avec notre Fondation depuis 1984, et sans lequel il ne nous serait guère possible de faire progresser notre œuvre selon le programme que nous avons établi. Mais outre cet aspect financier il faut souligner à nouveau l'amplitude de la collaboration scientifique internationale qui s'est encore accrue en 1989 par la participation du Japon dont nous espérons qu'elle enrichira notre trésor documentaire. D'autre part les collaborateurs des divers pays ont continué à nous apporter leur aide avec un dévouement sans faille et une compétence qui ont permis à nos volumes successifs d'atteindre et de garder le haut niveau scientifique dont les comptes rendus parus jusqu'à ce jour témoignent largement.

I. Organisation internationale

1. Le Conseil de Fondation, composé d'un membre de chaque institution qui contribue au Pool financier international, est à l'heure actuelle constitué de la manière suivante:

Algérie	Ministère de la Culture, Alger (depuis 1983): D <sup>r</sup> Fatma Kadra, Directeur de la Promotion du Patrimoine Culturel, Alger
Allemagne (République Fédérale)	Heidelberger Akademie der Wissenschaften, Heidelberg (depuis 1973): Pr. Tonio Hölscher (Université de Heidelberg)
Australie	Australian Academy for the Humanities, Canberra (depuis 1973): Pr. Alexander Cambitoglou (Université de Sydney)
Autriche	Österreichische Akademie der Wissenschaften, Wien (depuis 1976): Pr. Hermann Vetters (Université de Vienne)
Belgique	Fonds National de la Recherche Scientifique, Bruxelles (depuis 1973): Pr. Jean Ch. Balty, Chef de département (Antiquité) aux Musées Royaux d'Art et d'Histoire de Bruxelles

Etats-Unis d'Amérique	National Endowment for the Humanities, Washington, et Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey, New Brunswick, New Jersey (depuis 1973): Pr. Jocelyn Penny Small (Directeur du LIMC, U.S. Center, Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey, New Brunswick, New Jersey) The J. Paul Getty Trust, Los Angeles, California (depuis 1984): M <sup>me</sup> Linda Pinkerton, Secretary and Trust Counsel, The J. Paul Getty Trust
France	Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres, Paris (depuis 1983): Pr. Jean Pouilloux (Université de Lyon, membre de l'Institut); Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique, Paris (depuis 1973): Pr. Lilly Kahil (Directeur de recherche titulaire au CNRS; attachée à l'Université de Paris X)
Grande-Bretagne	British Academy, Londres (depuis 1973): Sir John Boardman (Université d'Oxford)
Grèce	Académie d'Athènes, Athènes (depuis 1983) Société Archéologique d'Athènes, Athènes (depuis 1973) et Université d'Athènes, Athènes (depuis 1987): Pr. Vassilis Lambrinoudakis, Président du Comité grec pour le LIMC (Université d'Athènes)
Italie	Unione Accademica Nazionale, Rome (depuis 1973): Pr. Giovannangelo Camporeale (Université de Florence et Istituto Nazionale di Studi Etruschi ed Italici)
Jordanie	Department of Antiquities, Amman (depuis 1985): D <sup>r</sup> Fawzi Zayadine, Directeur adjoint du Département des Antiquités, Amman
Pologne	Polska Akademia Nauk, Varsovie (depuis 1978): Pr. Marie-Louise Bernhard (Université de Cracovie)
Suisse	Fonds National Suisse de la Recherche Scientifique, Berne (depuis 1973): Pr. Walter Burkert (Université de Zurich)
Tunisie	Institut National d'Archéologie et d'Art, Tunis (depuis 1979): D <sup>r</sup> Abdelmegid Ennabli, Conservateur en chef du site de Carthage.

2. Le Comité scientifique international, composé d'un à deux membres de chaque pays participant et de représentants d'organisations internationales, est aujourd'hui constitué de la manière suivante:

Allemagne (République Fédérale)	Pr. Tonio Hölscher (Université de Heidelberg) et Pr. Erika Simon (Université de Wurzburg)
Australie	Pr. Alexander Cambitoglou (Université de Sydney) et Pr. Arthur Dale Trendall (Université La Trobe, Bundoora)
Autriche	Pr. Hermann Vetters (Université de Vienne; Österreichische Akademie der Wissenschaften) et D <sup>r</sup> Thomas Sengelin, collaborateur scientifique autrichien pour le LIMC (Vienne)

Belgique	Pr. Jean Ch. Balty, Chef de département (Antiquité) aux Musées Royaux d'Art et d'Histoire de Bruxelles
Canada	Pr. Tran Tam Tinh (Université Laval, Québec)
Etats-Unis d'Amérique	Pr. Jocelyn Penny Small, Directeur du LIMC, U.S. Center, Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey, New Brunswick, New Jersey, et M <sup>me</sup> Linda Pinkerton, Secretary and Trust Counsel, The J. Paul Getty Trust, Los Angeles
France	Pr. Philippe Bruneau (Université de Paris IV - Sorbonne) et Pr. Lilly Kahil, Directeur de recherche au CNRS, attachée à l'Université de Paris X
Grande-Bretagne	Sir John Boardman (Université d'Oxford)

AIESEE	Pr. Virgil Cândea (Secrétaire général de l'Association Internationale d'Etudes du Sud-Est Européen)

3. Le Président: Pr. Jean Pouilloux (Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres).

4. Le Secrétaire général: Pr. Lilly Kahil.

5. Le Trésorier de la Fondation: Pr. Herbert A. Cahn (Bâle et Université de Heidelberg).

6. Le Comité de rédaction: les Professeurs Jean Ch. Balty, Ernst Berger, John Boardman, Philippe Bruneau, Fulvio Canciani, Lilly Kahil, Vassilis Lambrinoudakis, et Erika Simon.

La Rédaction de Bâle est financée par le Pool financier international, celle de Heidelberg et Wurzburg par la Heidelberger Akademie der Wissenschaften et la Bayerische Akademie der Wissenschaften, celle de Paris par le Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique, l'Université de Paris X, le Ministère des Affaires Étrangères et le Ministère de l'Éducation Nationale.

Comme par le passé des savants, experts dans divers domaines, nous ont fait bénéficier de leur expérience: pour les textes anciens, le Pr. Walter Burkert (Université de Zurich) et le D<sup>r</sup> Malcolm Davies (Université d'Oxford), pour l'étruscologie, le Pr. Helmut Rix (Université de Fribourg-en-Brisgau) et le D<sup>r</sup> Ingrid Krauskopf (Heidelberger Akademie der Wissenschaften), et pour la numismatique, le D<sup>r</sup> Martin J. Price (British Museum), le D<sup>r</sup> I. A. Carradice (British Museum) et le Pr. Herbert A. Cahn (Université de Heidelberg). Qu'ils trouvent ici l'expression de notre reconnaissance la plus sincère. Celle-ci s'adresse également au Séminaire d'Archéologie de l'Université de Bâle (Pr. Rolf Stucky) et à la «Monnaies et Médailles» S.A. (Bâle) qui mettent libéralement à notre disposition les richesses de leurs bibliothèques.

II. Patronages d'organisations internationales

Pendant les deux années écoulées depuis la parution du volume IV du LIMC, les organismes scientifiques internationaux ont bien voulu poursuivre l'aide financière qu'ils nous accordent. Il est évident que, en raison de la situation économique internationale, cette aide a parfois dû être réduite. Mais l'important pour nous c'est qu'elle continue de nous être apportée, et qu'elle témoigne ainsi de la confiance, j'ose dire sans cesse accrue, dont bénéficie notre entreprise. C'est ainsi que l'Unesco a bien voulu accueillir le LIMC parmi ses «organisations non gouvernementales» (ONG), ce qui constitue pour nous une assurance pour la préservation et la permanence du trésor documentaire que nous rassemblons depuis une vingtaine d'années. Parmi les organismes qui ont à nouveau contribué à notre financement, nous avons plaisir à citer et à remercier l'Unesco, Paris, par l'intermédiaire du Conseil international de la Philosophie et des Sciences Humaines (CIPSH), Paris, et de l'Union Académique Internationale (UAI), Bruxelles. L'Association Internationale d'Études du Sud-Est Européen (AIESEE), dont le Secrétaire général est à présent le Professeur V. Căndeia (Bucarest), continue à collaborer avec le LIMC, qui est aussi patronné par la Commission Internationale de Numismatique (CIN) affiliée au Comité International des Sciences Historiques (CISH).

Comme les autres volumes déjà parus, le tome V a largement bénéficié de l'aide de la communauté scientifique, qui nous est indispensable. Nous tenons à exprimer notre gratitude aux académies, centres de recherche, institutions archéologiques, éphories, surintendances, musées et universités auxquels nous faisons si souvent appel, qu'il s'agisse de renseignements, de photographies ou d'un soutien financier. Je ne saurais assez rendre grâce à ce concours désintéressé et généreux.

Je veux à nouveau redire notre reconnaissance à M. J. d'Ormesson, de l'Académie française, Secrétaire général du CIPSH, au Professeur P. Roberts-Jones, membre de l'Académie, Secrétaire administratif de l'UAI, ainsi qu'aux Professeurs Ch. Delvoye et J. Ch. Balty (Université Libre de Bruxelles et Musées Royaux d'Art et d'Histoire). Le D<sup>r</sup> M. Bouchenaki, Chef de la Section des Campagnes Internationales de Sauvegarde du Patrimoine Culturel de l'Humanité à l'Unesco, ainsi que les diverses délégations auprès de l'Unesco qui veulent bien soutenir nos demandes de subvention, et je mentionne principalement la Délégation grecque qui prend souvent l'initiative, méritent toute notre gratitude.

En France, le Professeur J. Leclant, Secrétaire perpétuel de l'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres, continue à nous apporter son concours scientifique et à nous assurer l'aide morale et financière de l'Académie. Cette année tout particulièrement nous avons bénéficié de ses conseils et de sa présence. Avec lui, les Professeurs P. Demargne, P. Grimal, J. Marcadé, ainsi que d'autres membres de l'Institut n'ont cessé de nous accorder leur soutien efficace et le Professeur F. Chamoux continue à veiller tout particulièrement aux relations entre l'UAI et le LIMC dont il est le représentant. En 1989, M. M. Druon, Secrétaire perpétuel de l'Académie française, a pu nous assurer une donation exceptionnelle. La Direction du C.N.R.S. (Professeurs J. Lautman et A. Tchernia), en dépit d'une situation difficile, a maintenu son concours, et les Ministères de l'Éducation Nationale (M. B. Dormy), par l'intermédiaire de l'Université Lumière Lyon 2, et des Affaires Étrangères (M<sup>me</sup> M.-P. de Cossé-Brissac) ont accordé leur soutien financier.

En Grèce, l'Académie d'Athènes, avec les Professeurs M. Hadzidakis, M. Pallantios, M. Sakellariou, C. Trypanis, A. Vlachos et D. Zakythinos, nous a à nouveau généreusement apporté son assistance financière; et le Conseil de la Société Archéologique d'Athènes (Président le D<sup>r</sup> G. Dontas, Secrétaire général le D<sup>r</sup> V. Petrakos) a doublé sa subvention. L'Université d'Athènes (Recteur M. Stathopoulos), le Musée Bénaki (Directeur D<sup>r</sup> A. Delivorrias), la Fondation Psicha ont continué à nous apporter leur soutien. Le Ministre M<sup>me</sup> M. Mercouri, au nom du Ministère de la Culture, nous a fait une donation exceptionnelle. Comme par le passé, le Service archéologique, les divers éphories et musées ont contribué à la parution de ce nouveau volume en favorisant nos recherches, en nous accordant les autorisations nécessaires pour le rassemblement de la documentation et en nous fournissant quasi gratuitement les illustrations. S. Exc. A. Phrydas, ancien Ambassadeur de Grèce auprès de l'Unesco, n'a cessé au cours de ces deux dernières années encore de nous faire bénéficier de son expérience.

En Italie, à l'occasion des réunions du Conseil de Fondation et du Comité Scientifique international à Rome en mai 1989, réunions qui ont été précédées d'un Colloque sur le thème «Iconographie, Mythologie, Religion», le Comitato per le Scienze storiche, filosofiche e filologiche (CNR), et le Ministero per i Beni Culturali ed Ambientali ont accordé une contribution exceptionnelle à la Fondation pour le LIMC.

En Suisse, le Fonds national suisse de la Recherche scientifique a poursuivi son financement annuel, assurant ainsi à la Rédaction de Bâle la continuité harmonieuse de son travail: comme par le passé, nous tenons à exprimer notre reconnaissance aux Professeurs G. Gaudard (Université de Fribourg), Directeur de la Division des Sciences humaines, et Ch. Bonnet (Université de Genève), rapporteur de l'archéologie, ainsi qu'à M<sup>me</sup> D. Ritter au Secrétariat de la même Division. La Ceramica-Stiftung de Bâle a, cette fois encore, contribué à la publication du nouveau volume par la subvention qu'elle nous accorde généreusement, et nous avons reçu des dons de la Max Geldner-Stiftung, du Vergabungsausschuss de la CIBA-GEIGY, de la Jubiläumsstiftung de la Société de Banque Suisse, de la Fondation Palladion et de M. G. Ortiz. Enfin, le Professeur K. Schefold (Université de Bâle) nous a, comme depuis le début de l'entreprise, conseillés et aidés de bien des manières.

Aux USA, à l'Institute for Advanced Study, Princeton, les Professeurs G. Bowersock et H. Thompson (qui déjà m'avait encouragée dès l'élaboration même du projet du Lexicon), les Professeurs W. Childs (Université de Princeton) et K. Erim (Université de New York), Directeur des fouilles d'Aphrodisias, ont poursuivi l'aide qu'ils nous accordent en toutes circonstances. C'est cette fois encore au J. Paul Getty Trust (Los Angeles) et à ceux d'entre ses collaborateurs plus particulièrement chargés de notre entreprise (M<sup>me</sup> L. Pinkerton en premier lieu) que s'adresse notre vive gratitude. Le Bureau européen du J. Paul Getty Trust (M<sup>me</sup> K. Blanc) est, lui aussi, pour nous d'un grand secours.

Je voudrais surtout, en terminant, adresser nos remerciements les plus vifs à tous les membres du Conseil de la Fondation, à ceux du Comité scientifique international, et en particulier à ceux du Comité de Rédaction, ainsi qu'aux membres de la Rédaction centrale de Bâle, des rédactions de Paris, de Heidelberg-Wurzburg, au Centre de documentation d'Athènes (Société archéologique et Comité national grec pour le LIMC), au Centre de documentation de la Rutgers University, New Brunswick, New Jersey (Directeur, Pr. J. P. Small, Directeur Assistant, D<sup>r</sup> L. J. Roccas, et les membres du Conseil). Enfin, je redis, au nom de nous tous, notre reconnaissance émue à Jean Pouilloux, de l'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres, Président de notre Fondation depuis maintenant cinq ans, sans lequel nous n'aurions pu surmonter les difficultés de toute sorte que nous avons rencontrées; aujourd'hui encore, il suit pas à pas les progrès de notre entreprise, à laquelle il donne le meilleur de lui-même.

La maison d'édition Artemis Verlag de Zurich, avec le D<sup>r</sup> B. Mariacher auquel a succédé M. F. Ebner, et son équipe, a, comme pour les volumes précédents, réalisé un travail de haute qualité, et nous a permis de respecter le calendrier de parution du tome V.

Abkürzungen / Abbreviations / Abréviations / Abbreviazioni

Ergänzungen zum Abkürzungsverzeichnis Band I S. XXXIV-LIII
 Supplement to the List of Abbreviations, vol. I pp. XXXIV-LIII
 Supplément à la liste des abréviations vol. I pp. XXXIV-LIII
 Supplemento all'elenco delle abbreviazioni del vol. I pp. XXXIV-LIII

A. Abkürzungen antiker Texte / Abbreviations of Ancient Texts
Abréviations de textes anciens / Abbreviazioni dei testi antichi

Für die antiken Autoren sind die Titel griechischer Werke, die nicht in den Abkürzungsverzeichnissen des LIMC zu finden sind, nach Liddell/Scott (die Moralia Plutarchs nach Oxford Classical Dictionary), die Titel lateinischer Werke nach ThLL abgekürzt. Für papyrologische Publikationen werden die in Liddell/Scott xliii-xlv und Suppl. x-xi, III. Papyrological publications, verzeichneten Abkürzungen verwendet.

For titles by Greek and Latin authors which do not appear in the List of Abbreviations in LIMC, the abbreviations in Liddell/Scott (except for Plutarch, Moralia where the Oxford Classical Dictionary is used) and ThLL are followed. For papyrological publications the abbreviations in Liddell/Scott xliii-xlv and Suppl. x-xi, III. Papyrological publications, are used.

Pour les sources grecques non mentionnées dans les listes d'abréviations du LIMC, on se reportera aux abréviations de Liddell/Scott (à l'exception des Moralia de Plutarque citées d'après l'Oxford Classical Dictionary), pour les sources latines, aux abréviations du ThLL.

Les abréviations de publications papyrologiques sont empruntées à Liddell/Scott xliii-xlv et Suppl. x-xi, III. Papyrological publications.

Nelle citazioni le fonti greche non comprese nell'elenco delle abbreviazioni del LIMC sono abbreviate secondo Liddell/Scott (i Moralia di Plutarco però secondo l'Oxford Classical Dictionary); le abbreviazioni delle fonti latine sono invece secondo il ThLL. Per le pubblicazioni papirologiche si usano le abbreviazioni elencate in Liddell/Scott xliii-xlv e Suppl. x-xi, III. Papyrological publications.

 V Birds
 VII Bull
 VIII Horses of Diomedes
 IX Amazon
 X Geryon
 XI Kerberos
 XII Hesperides

A. Herakles Dodekathlos

In later literature and art H.'s Labours for → Eurystheus of Argos were «canonised» in content and order. This section is devoted to monuments which display the canon, its variants and its possible origins.

H.'s service to Eurystheus in performing the Labours was attributed to the malignity of Hera. Some episodes demonstrate this service, others appear to have been adapted or borrowed to swell the number without especial regard to Eurystheus, and at all times other deeds of H. could be associated with those more implicitly connected with his service to the king.

LITERARY SOURCES: The word δωδεκάθλος does not appear before the Roman period (Liddell/Scott s.v.) and is then applied to the victor, not the series of Labours. Literary evidence of iconographic value relates to the identity, number and order of the Labours performed for Eurystheus.

Dire Labours to be performed for an inferior mortal are mentioned by H. in Hades in Hom. Od. 11, 621-622 and Eurystheus is named in Il. 8, 363; 15, 639-640; 19, 133. Hera's enmity for H., which lies behind the imposition of the Labours is alluded to in Il. 18, 119; 19, 133. Although service to Eurystheus is the theme of several of the Labours this is not always the sole reason for H.'s ordeals. Euripides acknowledges the possible role of Hera's enmity but the Labours are the price H. has to pay for regaining his Argive birthright and their purpose is a civilizing one, cleansing land and sea (Herc. 14-22), a point made earlier by Pindar (N. 1, 61-63). In Apollod. bibl. 2 (73) 4, 12 his twelve-year service and ten Labours (Eurystheus disputed the validity of two) were the price of his immortality, promised by the Pythia. In Hes. sc. 89-94, in lines mentioning H.'s ἀεθλοι, it is → Iphikles who served Eurystheus. Virgil (Aen. 8, 291) has mille labores for Eurystheus, and a confused list.

Of the canonic Labours only → Kerberos is mentioned in Homer (Il. 8, 362-369; Od. 11, 623-626). Hesiod describes several: theog. 287-294, Geryon (cf. 979-983); 313-318, the Hydra reared by Hera to fight H.; as is the Lion, 327-332. Peisandros of Rhodes wrote an epic Herakleia (Davies EGF pp. 131-133), probably in the later 7th cent., and Theocritus' epigram (22) for a statue of him claims that he described «all the Labours that he completed». Peis. is elsewhere mentioned as dealing with the Lion, Hydra, Deer, Birds, Geryon, and, of other adventures, Antaios, centaurs, Troy and perhaps the journey to the west (cf. Huxley, G. L., Greek Epic Poetry [1969] 100-105).

While allusions to individual Labours are not uncommon they are not in extant literature treated as a group until the 5th cent. Pindar is surprisingly reticent about them, referring simply to the many lawless monsters H. would slay on land and sea (N. I, 61-63); but in a poem which seems to have dealt with H. in more detail (Pind. frag. 169 Snell/Maehler; see Pavese, C., HSCP 72, 1968, 81-83) he is able to number them since he refers, perhaps to Kerberos, as the twelfth (or possibly tenth; we have ἡεκάτ[η]). The exact composition and order of the Labours in Panyassis' Herakleia are not known (Huxley, o.c. 182-186; Matthews, V. J., Panyassis of Halikarnassos [1974] 21-26). The chorus in Soph. Trach. (1089-1102) mentions I, II, Centaurs, III, XI, XII in one passage, and the chorus in Eur. Herc. (359-435) has twelve, but three are outside the later canon, and the Hesperides and Atlas episodes are treated separately (the order is I, Centaurs, IV, VIII, Kyknos, XII, Sea-clearing, XII [Atlas], IX, II, X, XI). The choice of the additional three reinforces Euripides' presentation of the Labours as beneficial to mankind (Bond, ad loc.). That twelve are mentioned, whatever the composition, may be significant.

The order of the Labours in these plays is irregular but both have I first, and for the last Eur. has XI, Soph. XII. The next references to the twelve, without specifying the content, are in Theokr. 24, 82; Apoll. Rhod. I, 1317-1318; Euphorion frag. 51, 13 Powell; perhaps Kleantes, SVF I 115 frag. 514; Kall. frag. 23, 19-20 Pf. Plautus, whose sources are 4th cent. and later, has I, II, IV, III, V and Antaios in Persa 3-4 and knows a 'sixth' (perhaps V or VI) in Epid. 179. In a Hellenistic (?) tragedy, H. on Oita reflects on a number of his Labours and exploits (TGF II F 653).

The canonic composition and order, as expressed in the table above, appears only in later writers, and has been adopted from them by modern scholars, since it is an order only rarely met on monuments (1730. 1731). It appears thus in Diod. 4, 8-27 (with other episodes) and the Tabula Albana (IG XIV 1293; FGH 40 F 1c; Sadurska, Tables 86-89). There are slight differences in the order in Apollod. bibl. 2 (74-126) 5 (exchanging III and IV, V and VI, XI and XII); followed by Tzet. chil. 2, 232-410; Hyg. fab. 30 (exchanging XI and XII); Q. Smyrn. 6, 200-268 (exchanging VIII and IX, XI and XII); and an incomplete version of the canonic order in Serv. Aen. 8, 299.

A different order, but one followed by several monuments (1713-1729) is I-V, IX, VI-VIII, X-XII, found in Anth. Pal. 16, 92; Anth. Lat. 1, 627 Buecheler/Riese; Auson. eccl. 24 Prete (exchanging XI and XII). The canonic order keeps together I-VI, which are the Peloponnesian episodes, taking H. then south (VII), north (VIII), east (IX), west (X), to the Underworld (XI), and to the far west en route to Olympus (XII). The variant order brings Amazons (IX) into a more prominent position at the end of the first half (Robert 432-433, saw here Commodus' interest in the Amazon story but our 1714 may be earlier). In both schemes, as in art, XI and XII may be exchanged.

A meaningless order for all or many of the Labours appears in Anth. Pal. 16, 91 (on a monument at Pergamon); 93 (Gow/Page, The Garland of Philip II 366 Philip 68); Lucr. 5, 22-36; Sen. Ag. 829-866, Herc. f. 222-248, Herc. O. 16-27; Martialis 9, 101, 4-10.

1. Archaic Greek

Monuments with four or more episodes are listed, in approximate chronological order. There may have been groups of episodes on Corinthian vases: e.g., Perachora II no. 2542 pls. 106. 110, which has I, X and Kerkopes, with room for more on the frieze (Middle Corinthian); and there are pairs, e.g. the lost cup, Schefold, Sagenbilder fig. 23, with II, XI.

1697. Wood, ivory and gold. Chest of Kypselos at Olympia. Lost. - Paus. 5, 17-19; Overbeck, SQ no. 256. - Mid 6th cent. B.C. - II, X, XII, Atlas, Centaurs; with many other myth figures and groups. The H. scenes are not grouped.

1698.* Limestone metopes on the 'Treasury' of Hera at the R. Silaris, Paestum. Paestum Mus. - Zancani/Zanotti, Sele II (1954) and AttiMGreca 5, 1964, 83-95; Simon, E., JdI 82, 1967, 275-295; Napoli, M., Civiltà della M. Grecia (1969) 369-382; Schmidt, M., in Festschr. F. Brommer (1977) 265-275; Croissant, F., BCH 89, 1965, 390-399; Schefold, SBII 223, 261-262, 269. - Mid 6th cent. B.C. - I, III, Deianeira (= Deianeira II 9), Nessos, Apollo and tripod, Kerkopes, Pholos and Centaurs, Antaios (?), Giant (= Alkyoneus 35, doubtful), Hera and satyrs (= 3348a). The order is unknown and variously conjectured.

1700. Bronze plaques on the Temple of Athena Chalkioikos, Sparta, by Gitiadas. Lost. - Paus. 3, 17, 3; Overbeck, SQ no. 357. - Later 6th cent. B.C. - 'Many' deeds of H.

1701. Throne of Apollo at Amyklai, by Bathykles. Lost. - Paus. 3, 18, 10-16; Overbeck, SQ no. 360. - Later 6th cent. B.C. - I, II, VIII, X-XII, Acheloos, Aktorione, Atlas, Introduction, Kyknos, Nessos, Oreios (centaur), Pholos, Thourios (giant). Paus. does not make clear how closely the scenes may be grouped.

1702.* Volute crater, Attic rf. Malibu, Getty Mus. 77.AE.11 (once part Paris G 166 and Florence PD 507). - ARV 186, 51/52: Kleophrades P.; Add 188; Greifenhagen, A., Neue Fragmente des Kleophradesmalers, SbHeidelberg (1972) pls. 20-25; Frel, J., GettyMusJ 4, 1977, 68-69 figs. 9-12. - Early 5th cent. B.C. - In one frieze, II (= Iolaos 23), X, XII; in another, Amazonomachy.

1703.* Marble metopes on the Athenian Treasury at Delphi. Delphi Mus. - De La Coste Messelière, P., FDelphes IV 4 (1957) and BCH 90, 1966, 709 (removing ? Tripod); Boardman, GSAP fig. 213; Hoffelner, K., AM 103, 1988, 93-103. - Early 5th cent. B.C. - FDelphes order is - West (rear): X. North: I, Centaur, VIII?, IV, Atlas?, Kyknos, IX (= Amazones 95). Hoffelner order (as illustrated) is - East: I, Centaur, IV, IX, VIII, Kyknos. West: X.

1704. Dedication of Herakleia Pontou at Olympia. Unknown material. Lost. - Paus. 5, 26, 7. - I, II, XI, III. The occasion was a successful invasion of the neighbouring Mariandynoi, so probably Late Archaic. In the territory of the Mariandynoi lay an entrance to Hades whence H. brought Kerberos (cf. ML II 1, 1124 s.v. 'Kerberos').

2. Classical and Hellenistic Greek

Monuments with, or suspected of having had, eight or more episodes are listed, in approximate chronological order.

1705.** Marble metopes on the Temple of Zeus at Olympia. Olympia Mus.; Paris, Louvre. - Paus. 5, 10, 9 (Overbeck, SQ no. 1034) gives the order, accidentally omitting XI; Ashmole, B./Yalouris, N., Olympia (1967); Ashmole, B., Architect and Sculptor in Classical Greece (1972) ch. 3; Stucchi, S., ASAtene 30-32, 1955, 117-126 (suggests a rearrangement, the original order being different; this is not followed here);

Boardman, GSCP fig. 22; Geertman, H., BullAntBesch 57, 1982, 70-86; Vollkommer fig. 1. - Completed by 456 B.C. - West end: I, II, V, VII, IV, IX (= Amazones 97). East end: III, VIII, X, XII, XI, VI.

1706.** Marble metopes on the Temple of Hephaistos at Athens. - Koch, H., Studien zum Theseustempel in Athen (1955) pls. 18-23; Morgan, C., Hesperia 31, 1962, 211-219; Boardman, GSCP fig. 111. - About 450 B.C. - East facade: I, II, IV, III, VIII, XI, IX (= Amazones 99), X (two metopes), XII. Eight metopes of Theseus scenes on adjacent side metopes and perhaps the inner frieze. Theseus centauromachy at west end.

1707. Marble column reliefs from the Temple of Artemis at Ephesus. London, BM 1220-1221. 1204-1206. 1215. - BMSculpture II; Lethaby, W. R., JHS 36, 1916, 25-31. - 350-300 B.C. - Identifications are most uncertain and the order unknown. IV, XII, Alkestis (= Alkestis 61), Antaios, Kyknos, Omphale, Triton.

1708.* Marble votive relief. Sunium. From the Herakleion. - Young, J. H., Hesperia 10, 1941, 172-175, 186-189. - 4th cent. B.C. (?); Schefold/Jung, SB IV 347 n. 302: 'neo-Attic/Roman'. - Incomplete. Side A: Theseus and Minotaur and IV. Side B: H. with Eurystheus in pithos (III). Back (in pairs): VIII and X, Centaur and XII. Front: athlete victor. Apparently a long series of perhaps 24 scenes devoted to H. and Theseus.

1709. Statues by Lysippus at Alyzia. Taken to Rome. Lost. - Strabon 10, 2, 21 p. 459 (Overbeck, SQ no. 1477); Loeffler, E., Marsyas 6, 1950-53, 8-24; Hausmann 85-86; Borbein, Campanareliefs 167-168; Fazio, G. M., Annali Bari 19/20, 1976/7, 71-98; Voegtli 46-58; Moreno. - Later 4th cent. B.C. - 'The Labours', number and order unknown.

1710. 'Pediments by Praxiteles' in the Temple of Herakles at Thebes. Lost. - Paus. 9, 11, 6 (Overbeck, SQ no. 1285). - 4th cent. B.C. - I-IV, VII-XII, Antaios. Order unknown.

1711.* Clay relief bowl. Once Berlin, Staatl. Mus. 3161g. From Anthedon. - Robert, C., Homörische Becher (1890) 86-89 fig. e; Hausmann 67; Sinn, of the following Labours – I, IV, II, (?), Ketos (Hesione), III?, V, (?), (?), Prometheus' eagle, X, H. standing, Acheloos (probable order).

1740. Volubilis (Morocco), Maison des Travaux d'Hercule. – Thouvenot, E., PSAM 6, 1941, 72–81 figs. 4, 5; and 8, 1948, 102 pl. 2; Dunbabin, Mosaics 277, 6. – About A.D. 200. – Medallions in no discernible order, with Rape of Ganymede (= Ganymedes 215) and Horai (= Horai/Horae 168). I–III, V–VII, IX, XI, Antaios (= Antaios I 42), Snakes (= 1599).

1741. Madrid, Arch. Mus. 2/1943. From Liria, near Valencia. – Lippold 1–17 pl. 1; AJA 53, 1949, pl. 24; Brommer, H. pl. 31; ArtBull 55, 1973, 13 fig. 19; Balil, A., Archivo de prehist. Levantina 15, 1978/79, 265–267 pls. 1–8; Jacopi pl. 84. – 3rd cent. A.D. – Arranged in panels around a central panel with H. and Omphale, anticlockwise: I, II, VII, XII, VIII, X, VI, XI, III, IX, IV, V.

1742. Biscaye cemetery (anc. Cartima). From Cartama, near Malaga. – AdI 1862, 288 pl. Q; Balil, A., Estudios sobre mosaicos romanos V (1978) (Studia Arch. 49, Valladolid); Gozlan figs. 1–14. – 3rd cent. A.D. – Around central panel with a standing H., anticlockwise, victims of the following Labours: I, II, IV, (?), III, IX, (?), (?), X–XII, Acheloos. Below drunken H.

1743. Piazza Armerina, Villa Erculia. – Gentili, G. V., La Villa Erculia di P. A. (1964) fig. 12 pls. 51–53; Settis, S., MEFRA 87, 1975, 965–967 fig. 61. – Early 4th cent. A.D. – Free field composition: I–IV, VII–XII, Sea-monster. Introduction in separate field.

Textile

Stone Reliefs

1745. Stone relief vase, «Tazza Albani». Rome, Mus. Torlonia 383. – Mus. Torlonia no. 383 pl. 95; Curtius, L., RM 49, 1934, 280–281 figs. 17–18; Milin, A. L., Myth. Gallerie (1848) no. 434 pls. 112, 113. – Augustan. – Scenes and pairs of scenes divided by personifications of places (?). I, XI, VIII, II, IV + V, III, VII + VI, X, XII, Centaur.

1746. Marble reliefs from the Theatre, Corinth. Corinth Mus. – Sturgeon, M., Corinth IX 2 (1977) 91–114. – Hadrianic. – All Labours may have been shown but the only certainly identifiable are I–III, V, VIII–XI. Order unknown.

1747. Marble reliefs. Vatican 431 and 444. From Palestrina. – Amelung, SkulptVatMus II pl. 80. – 2nd cent. A.D. – Restored into two slabs, the original order not known, but clearly from a single monument. I–VII, XII (XII followed VII).

1749. Stone relief slabs. Toulouse, Mus. St-Raymond 30381. From Chiragan. – Espérandieu, Recueil II no. 899; Reinach, RépRel 100–102. – About 200 A.D. – Provincial work. Separate slabs. I–X, XII.

1750. (= 1054) Marble relief. Sofia, Nat. Arch. Mus. 4710. From Madara. – Filow, o. c. 1738, 86 fig. 1; Saxl, o. c. 1738, pl. 20, 105; Gold der Thraker (1979) no. 493. – 2nd/3rd cent. A.D. – Reclining H. with symbols of his Labours. Behind him a tree with snake (XII). Beside him the Hydra (II), boar (III), a deer (IV?), birds (V), lion (I). In lower frieze, bull (VII) and disc, horses (VIII), bulls and Geryon? (X).

1751. Reliefs in the Temple of Hercules at Cadiz. Lost. – Sil. 3, 32–44. – II, I, XI, VIII, III, IV, Antaios, Centaur, Acheloos (= Acheloos 267), Pyre.

1752. Marble sarcophagus, Roman. London, BM 2300. – SarkRel III 1 no. 120 pl. 33; Smith, BMSculpture III no. 2300; Voegtli pl. 16; Lavagne 281 fig. 13. –

A.D. 150–180. – Front: XI, IX, XII, VIII, I. Side: IV, II. Coping: Snakes (= 1603*), III, VI, V, VII, X, H. and Nike (?) (see Section X, Nike, Commentary).

1753. Sundial at Gaza. Lost. – Pröcopius, ἔκφρασις ἀρολογίου; Diels, H., AbhBerlin 1917, 7 and Antike Technik (1924) 219–227. – Marking the hours. I and XII were in the expected positions, it seems.

Clay relief bowls

1754. All (except X on present evidence) Labours appear to have been represented on pairs of relief bowls represented in various complete examples and fragments, not always in the same order. I cite the two most complete. Discussion in Spitzer, D. C., Hesperia 11, 1942, 166–172; Todisco, L., Annali Bavi 21, 1978, 51–60. – 2nd/3rd cent. A.D. – a) Once Sieglin Coll. V 192. From Alexandria. – Pagenstecher, R., ExpSieglin II 3 (1913) pls. 22, 23; Jacopi, pl. 91, 1. – I, II, III, IV, V, IX, VI. For other fr. of this type see Spitzer, and Todisco, o. c.; ArchDelt 30, 1975, B pl. 57b (Patras: I, II). – b) Brussels, Mus. Roy. R 524. – CV4 3 pl. 1 (139), 2; Spitzer, o. c. 170 fig. 7. – IX, VI, VII, VIII, XI, XII.

Metal and ivory reliefs

1755. Plaster casts of relief roundels. Hildesheim, Pel. Mus. From Memphis. – Ippel, A., BerlWPr 1937, 29–37 figs. 18–27 pls. 2, 3; Reinsberg, C., Studien zur hellenistischen Toreutik (1980) nos. 72–84 figs. 116–126, 129. – The originals were probably Late Hellenistic; the find is 1st cent. A.D. – The roundels carry various figures and scenes including the following with H. (following Reinsberg's more cautious identifications), possibly meant as a series: I, III–V, VII–IX, XII, Acheloos.

1756. Two silver cups. Naples, Mus. Naz. From Pompeii. – Maiuri, A., Casa di Menandro (1933) 310–321 nos. 3–4 pls. 25–30. – Augustan. – a) Cup no. 3: I, X, Antaios, IV, IX, II. b) Cup no. 4: III, Pholos, V, XII, VIII, XI.

1757. Plaster cast of relief-decorated dish. Trier, Landesmus. 33, 502. – Hausmann 129 n. 393 (d) pl. 68, 1. – The original probably c. A.D. 200 or later. – Encircling a head of Okeanos: I, V, (break for four scenes, presumably VI, IX–XI), XII, IV, VII, III, VIII, II.

1758. Bronze vase. Sofia, Nat. Arch. Mus. From Stara Zagora. – Arkheologia 3, 1961, 17 fig. 12; Mus. Nat. Stara Zagora (1965) no. 44. – 3rd cent. A.D. – Two friezes containing twelve Labours; details and order not published.

1759. Ivory relief plaques on throne. Rome, St Peter's. – Romanelli, P. in La cattedra lignea di S. Pietro in Vaticano (1971 = MemPontAcc 10) 203–216 pls. 44–53; Guarducci, M., MemLinc 16, 1972, 263–350; Weitzmann, K., ArtBull 55, 1973, 1–37; Fiaccadori, G., Felix Ravenna 118.2, 1979, 167–184; Volbach, W. F., Elfenbeinarbeiten der Spätantike und des frühen Mittelalters (1976) no. 260 pl. 115; cf. Nees, L., JWalt 46, 1988, 37–54. – Carolingian, 9th cent. A.D. based on 4th cent. models (Weitzmann); dates between the 1st and 11th cent. A.D. have been proposed (see Vol-bach). – Apparent original order: I–IV, VII, V, VI, Antaios, VIII, XI, Acheloos, XII. With six zodiac-animal panels.

Coins

1760. AE, Alexandria, Antoninus Pius. – BMC Alexandria 1043–1056; Bräuer, passim; Voegtli, passim, pl. 12. – Rev.: I–XII, Antaios (= Antaios I 55a*), Giantess, Pholos, Syleus.

1761. AU aurei, AE, Cologne (?), Postumus. – Bastien, P., RNum 1958, 59–78 pls. 4–7; Voegtli 59–64 pl. 15; Schulte, B., Die Goldprägung der galischen Kaiser von Postumus bis Tetricus (1983) 41–44, 106–116 nos. 120–153 pls. 10–12. – Rev.: I–XII, Antaios (= Antaios I 55r).

Most of the Labours also appear on coins of Herakleia Pontou (especially under Gordian III and Gallienus) and Perinthos (especially Gordian III): Voegtli, passim.

COMMENTARY

Before the 5th cent. it is clear that stories of H.'s Labours were commonly grouped, in art (1697–1704) and surely in literature, but the monuments give no indication of any canonic choice, number or order, and they commonly include episodes which, on no score, can be taken as Labours for Eurystheus.

The earliest indication of the numbering of the Labours is in Pindar, and the earliest clear indication of what that number was and its content is on the Temple of Zeus at Olympia (1705). Neither the priority nor the originality of either can be properly judged, but at Olympia the number suited and might therefore have been dictated by the architectural setting. The choice of Augeas (VI) as the last of the series was presumably a concession to the local interest of the story. The number and content of what was later the canonic twelve can be readily assigned to the period of Olympia and Pindar. That there were once ten Labours to which Eurystheus added two because H. had assistance over II and VI is a version (as in Apollod. bibl. 2 [113] 5, 11) which would not have left its mark in art. At this point the history of the twelve becomes obscure. The Hephaisteion (1706) presents nine, in something close to the later order. On the 4th cent. Temple of H. at Thebes (1710) Antaios substitutes for Augeas but we do not know the order. On a Hellenistic bowl (1711) which has six, only four (I–IV) are in order and its companion bowl must have been equally irregular, while on another (= Athena 57*) the Boar (III) is declared the «fifth» Labour. In the Augustan period the Tazza Albani (1745) and a pair of silver cups (1756) also confuse the order and add one or two episodes.

Meanwhile in literature Euripides held to twelve, but not the Olympia twelve, and although Hellenistic authors are sure about twelve they do not tell us which.

Reorganisation of the Olympia twelve was perhaps the work of an unknown Hellenistic author, and appears for us first in Diodorus and the Tabula Albana.

But the composition of the twelve seems not to have been well observed in art or literature, and there are often omissions and additions (notably Antaios, Centaurs and H.'s encounter with the snakes in his cradle; less commonly Apotheosis, Alkestis, Hesione, Achei-loos; several others one or twice). The literary order (followed in the numbering of the Labours in modern works) is very rarely strictly observed (1730. 1731). It seems based on the principle of placing the Peloponnesian scenes first, I-VI, then taking H. to south, north, east, west, hell and heaven. The richest sources for the Labours are of the 2nd/3rd cent. A.D., notably sarcophagi (cf. de Waele). Here a deviant order, bringing the Amazon (IX) back to sixth position, is favoured (1713-1729). The scheme is repeated in later literature, where too the last two Labours may be exchanged. But there were always other variants admitted and only I in first position and XI or XII in last seem universally observed, where order is observed at all.

It is generally assumed that Lysippus' group at Alyzia (1709) taken to Rome (perhaps in the later 2nd cent. B.C.) was influential in establishing the iconography and order of the series in Roman art. But we do not know the number, order or even content of the group, and it was made at a time when we cannot distinguish any clear canon. If this was the order I-XII then it had no immediate effect since, in art, we find it only much later (Asiatic sarcophagi 1730. 1731) when the variant order (promoting IX) is also becoming even more popular, and in literature it is attested only in Diodorus and the Tabula Albana, then ignored in favour of the variant. The 2nd cent. A.D. (Hadrian?) seems the time for the inception of the most popular later canon, with its minor variant corresponding to Diodorus and the Tabula. Perhaps the Delphi frieze (1712) could as well be associated with Lysippus, if it was made before the Alyzia group was removed to Rome.

One of the latest displays of the twelve, with only minor variations on the classic Roman schemes, is on the ivory throne reliefs in St. Peter's (1759).

1739. 1742 and 1750 are unusual in describing the Labours by showing the victims, not H.: cf. also the silver cup handle, BMSilverPlate no. 191, with victims of I-V, XII. The twelve are sometimes disposed on pairs of objects: Hellenistic and Roman clay bowls (1711. 1754), silver bowls (1756), gold bells (1728). They are sometimes disposed in a disc, like a zodiac, but the argument that they were originally intended to illustrate a zodiac or solar course (Bader, F., Minos 18, 1983, 219-256) ignores their chequered early history and uncertain order.

JOHN BOARDMAN

B. Herakles and the Nemean lion (Labour I)

H. strangled the lion which lived near Nemea, was invulnerable to weapons and had been attacking the inhabitants. He had to bring it to Eurystheus at Mycenae, the king having made himself an underground iron vessel in fear of the beast. In art the lion is slain by H. and not captured alive. H. thereafter wears its skin.

LITERARY SOURCES: The first account is in Hes. theog. 326-332 and the episode is more fully reported in [Theokr.] 25, 201-281; Diod. 4, 11, 3-4; Apollod. bibl. 2 [74-76] 5, 1 (followed by Pediaimos 1, 1-4). The Labour is otherwise barely noted in literature, generally for some specific aspect.

In Pind. I. 6, 47-48 and Bakchyl. 9, 6-9 this is H.'s first Labour and it is usually set at the start of the series. The lion controls the territory of Nemea, and in Hes. theog. 331 the mountains Tretos and Apesas; cf. Pind. I. 6, 47-48; Soph. Trach. 1092; [Theokr.] 25, 181-182; Diod. 4, 11, 3; Apollod. bibl. 2 [74] 5, 1. It lived in a cave: [Theokr.] 25, 223-224; Verg. Aen. 8, 295; and the cave had two openings: Diod. 4, 11, 4; Apollod. bibl. 2 [75] 5, 1. From this it took its various names: Hyg. fab. 30; Nigidius Figulus lxxxiii p. 114 Swoboda. In Panyassis (Davies EGF F1 = Steph. Byz. s.v. Βεῦσινα) the lion was named for the local town Bemina (cf. [Theokr.] 25, 201-203). Later tradition places it nearer Kleonai: Kall. Hec. frg. 339 Pf. and Suppl. Hell. 254-269; Suda s.v. Κλεωναί; Sen. Herc. f. 798; Lucanus 4, 612; Martialis 4, 60, 2; 5, 71, 3; Stat. Theb. 1, 487; silv. 4, 4, 28; 5, 2, 49. (For the lion of Cithaeron see Apollod. bibl. 2 (65-66) 4, 9-10 for the Teumessian monster see Stat. Theb. 1, 485. Both derive from the Nemean; cf. RE Suppl. III 934. 936.)

In Hes. theog. [326-327] the lion is the child of Orthos and either → Echidna or → Chimaira (see West ad loc.). Hera reared it: Bakchyl. 9, 7-8; Claud. (?) laus Herculis 75-77. In Apollod. bibl. 2 (74) 5, 1 it is the child of → Typhon; otherwise it was said to have come from heaven: Herodor. (FGH 31 F 4), or the moon: Epimenides, Diels Vorsokr. 6 3 B 2; Anaxagoras, ibid. 59 A 77; Plut. de fac. 937f; Schol. Pind. argumentum c. N.; Schol. Stat. Theb. 2, 58; Steph. Byz. s.v. Ἀνέσας. It is the child of the moon goddess in Euphorion (frg. 84, 4 Powell); Hyg. fab. 30, 2; Sen. Herc. f. 83; and was reared by her at Hera's order: Nig. Fig. l. c. Ps.-Plut. fluv. 18, 4 says that it was conjured from the foam by magic spells by Hera and Selene.

For its savagery and attacks on men see Hes. theog. 329; Bakchyl. 9, 6-9; Soph. Trach. 1092-1093; [Theokr.] 25, 201-202. It was unusually large: Diod. 4, 11, 3. It was invulnerable to iron weapons: Bakchyl. 13, 50-54; [Theokr.] 25, 230-231; Diod. 4, 11, 3; Apollod. bibl. 2 (74) 5, 1-3.

H. overcomes the lion without the help of weapons: Hes. theog. [332]; Soph. Trach. 1094; Hyg. astr. 2, 24; Paus. 6, 5, 5. It was strangled: Euphorion (l. c.); Eratosth. kat. 12; [Theokr.] 25, 266-267; Diod. 4, 11, 4; Apollod. bibl. 2 (75) 5, 3; Claud. (?) laus Herculis 94. Since the lion was invulnerable to metal weapons H. uses his club; in [Theokr.] 25, 255-261 it is knocked senseless with the club; in Apollod. bibl. 2 (75) 5, 3 it was driven into the cave with the club and there strangled; in Nigidius Figulus l. c. it is smitten by the club. Ptol. Chennos 2, 4 Chatzis has a snake beside H. in the fight, and says that the lion bit off H.'s finger. According to [Theokr.] 25, 272-279 H. skinned the lion with the help of its own claws and thereafter wore it as a protection: Stesich., Page PMG frg. 229; Peisandros, Davies EGF F 2; Pind. I. 6, 47; Eur. Herc. 361-363.

H. brought the dead lion to Molorchos at Kleonai (Kall., Suppl. Hell. 254-269; Apollod. bibl. 2 [74-75] 5, 1-4 for the Molorchos episode) and then went to Mycenae. The frightened Eurystheus hid himself in an underground iron vessel (Apollod. bibl. 2 [76] 5, 5).

This is the genesis of the most popular scheme, which persists through the Roman period (section 4), becoming modified in some scholars' view (Künzl, v. Salis; contra, Moreno) by Lysippos. It is the scheme adopted for the relief on the base of Poulydamas' dedication at Olympia about 340 B.C. executed by Lysippos (Paus. 6, 5, 1; Olympia III 209-211; Moreno, P., Lisippo I [1974] 11 fig. 14; Moreno 123 fig. a). ## COMMENTARY

GREEK

This Labour is the commonest of all mythological scenes in antiquity, most of the representations being in Attic vase-painting. The earliest certain scenes are of the last quarter of the 7th cent., in two different schemes. One, on a Peloponnesian shield band (1776) has H. attacking from the side without weapons, in this agreeing with the early literary sources, and this will be the dominant scheme. The second, on a Attic clay relief (1850) has H. facing the lion and stabbing it in the belly with a sword. The relief does not allow us to guess about its antecedents and it is unlikely that this is the origin of later Attic vase scenes where H. holds the lion's paw (1837); it more probably derives from anonymous lion-fights with a sword such as 1912 (cf. Kunze 100), and even earlier lion-fights with weapons (cf. Fittschen 81–84, e. f), in which case Attica did not in the 7th cent. create a new scheme (and at any rate it had no succession there). The Peloponnesian scheme of the wrestling is accepted by Attic vase painters from the second quarter of the 6th cent. so it is unlikely that the 8th cent. fight on 1907 has any mythological identity. Similar early scenes in other parts of Greece also have no following (1908. 1909. 1912. 1913). 1914, with the lion at its prey, is unique.

The Peloponnesian wrestling scheme certainly sets the model for all Greece at least by the second quarter of the 6th cent. Variants call identification into question: thus, the Laconian cup with the weapon-fight (1911), since Laconian painters know the wrestling scheme (1764). Scenes like 1910 have also to be excluded – a club-fighter between lions rather than a lion-fight. There are some genuine variants, however, such as Attic scenes from the mid-6th cent. on, where H. wrestles but also uses a sword. They do not derive from early sword-fights, since these are lacking in the first half of the 6th cent., nor from any literary source. They are influenced rather by the schemes of other Labours, as are those in which H. wrestles but also holds his club.

1. The wrestling scheme

The basic division is between scenes in which H. stands and in which he wrestles on the ground, but there is also a third smaller group in which he kneels or crouches, and this includes the earliest and the most widely spread examples. Wrestling beside the lion, both to r. and with the lion's forepaws raised (1776. 1778), appears at the end of the 7th cent. in the Peloponnese and survives outside Attica in the first quarter of the 6th. In Attica it appears just before mid-cent., as soon as the subject is admitted in any form. It suits the composition of tondi and may sometimes allow H. his usual weapons: the club on 1775. At the same time, and also favoured for tondi, there appears a second scheme with H. in Knielauf, also met once outside Attica (1764) with H. facing the lion. H. is usually at the l., holds the lion's neck and forepaw, while it turns its head and scratches at H.'s knee and shoulder (1762). Variants link H.'s hands (1764) or give him a club (1766), and in a commoner one the lion's head is not turned and we see H.'s r. hand in its jaws.

The appearance of this scheme when other vase shapes offer the standing fight suggest that this is simply a variant of the standing fight, designed for its suitability in a tondo (Schauenburg 2, 102). This seems true despite the fact that the scheme can be translated on to the exterior of cups (as 1762) and to other vases (1763) where the field does not determine the composition. Lesser artists cling to the scheme to the end of the century. Two late archaic scenes are, however, novel (1779. 1780) in having H. at the r., and for the size of the lion (esp. on 1780) and his grip – both hands round the neck. 1779 is a Caeretan hydria and 1780 from south Russia, so the scheme may be an east Greek invention, never adopted in the mainland.

All these schemes are essentially Archaic and do not lead in form or content to the Classical scheme (1767–1774) where H. kneels bending over the lion to strangle it. The popularity of this scheme from the end of the 5th cent. was again encouraged by the round fields employed for it, outside Greece proper, on intaglios (1767. 1768), coins (1772. 1773), mirrors and the like (1769–1771). H. is usually on one knee, without weapons (but for a club on some coins, 1773), facing the lion and clasping it to his chest, in three-quarter view with the lion in profile. These scenes take up the basic form of the Classical standing fights, and from their sources it can be seen that the type evolved as a variant of the standing fight in the work of western Greek gem- or die-engravers. The homeland ignored it and it is rare in the east (coins, 1773c. 1774f. g).

The standing fight evolves readily from the kneeling: the sequence with hero and lion becoming more upright is seen on the shield bands (1776, ending with 1830). A major type is seen in the early 6th cent. Peloponnese, also on vases (1828): naked H. moves r. seizing the lion, also to the r., its forepaw raised. A second type appears on another shield band at the same time (1799): H. faces the lion and they wrestle chest to chest, H. holding the neck and foreleg, the lion scratching H.'s arm. This seems related to the closed arm-grip of the earliest, specifically Peloponnesian wrestling scheme. Both schemes were taken up on Attic vases by mid-cent. (1781. 1831) with a preference for the facing fight. Two versions are seen: with the lion's head turned (1781–1790) or not (1792–1810), the latter corresponding to the kneeling variant, 1765. In Attica H.'s arm position varies a great deal: usually his r. hand holds the lion's forepaw (1781. 1782. 1792. 1793) – an Attic trait which persists to the end of the cent.; but he may stab the lion's neck with a sword (1787–1790. 1805–1808), or, in the last quarter cent., have his r. hand unoccupied or clenched (1785. 1786. 1794–1798); or, in the same years, link hands in the Peloponnesian scheme (1783. 1784. 1800. 1801), also adopted for the only Archaic free-standing group (1784).

Special variants in the second version (the lion's head not turned) are: H. dragging open the lion's jaws – between 540 and 510 (1803. 1804); or using the club (1810). Both versions recur in simple versions of the Classical and Hellenistic periods (1791. 1802). Wrestling from the side is less common, no doubt because the overlapping confuses the two figures. Amphorae typical of the floruit for this scheme in 560–530 add the Attic motif of grasping the jaws (1831. 1832), but most are just after the mid-cent., on Group E vases, with the Peloponnesian arm-grip (1829) or the Attic variants (unoccupied r. hand or use of sword, 1833).

H. is naked or in short chiton and the group is seldom unaccompanied (e.g., 1794). Athena and Iolaos usually attend (e.g., 1783. 1792. 1800. 1803. 1807. 1829. 1832); less often Hermes (1782. 1789. 1796. 1808. 1830) or other usually anonymous figures (1781. 1785. 1787. 1793. 1796. 1798. 1831. 1834). None participate.

Deviations from the basic schemes are seldom: H. stabs the lion (1806. 1834); 1835 relaxes the scheme of the fight from the side, leaving only the neck-grip; 1836 combines frontal and side fight with H. turning his back. Such scenes may be influenced by the more ambitious postures seen on red figure vases.

The new style of standing wrestling seems to reactivate the sword-fight, with H. stabbing the lion in the chest, as in 7th cent. Attic art (1850). This emerges in the second quarter of the 6th cent. on a shield band (1846). The basic difference is that in the sword fight the upper bodies do not cross and are linked only by the grasping arm (1837-1848). Other variants of the wrestling gradually impose themselves and render the sword fight superfluous: on 1847 H. holds a sword and seizes the lion by the throat; on 1840. 1843. 1848 the club replaces the sword; on 1837-1839 there are no weapons and H. seizes the paws; 1842 combines motifs with H. in the scheme of the sword fight but holding a club and the lion's paw.

In East Greece the wrestling seems unknown and the sword fight preferred (cf. Kunze 100); only attributes identify H. (lacking in the uncertain 1849). H. is usually at the r. (1842-1844. 1849; cf. 1778. 1779).

The sword fight lingers in the east, as in Attica, to the end of the cent. but is unimportant in the mainland. The commoner wrestling from the side lasts no longer. Only the wrestling from the front seems to have had something to offer the new space-conscious compositions of the 5th cent. The old type recurs in the mid-5th cent. on [Dodekathlos] 1706 (Hephais-teion) but in the last quarter of the century a new scheme emerges which persists through the Hellenistic period (1810-1827). The Archaic crossing bodies and single hand grip are replaced by the figure of H. bending over the lion and pressing its head to his chest. The lion usually fights back, scratching H.'s leg; its head is normally visible under H.'s r. arm and its forepaw scratches his arm (1812. 1815. 1822-1825). The scheme is seen once in the homeland at the end of the century (1811), then commonly in east and west, especially Magna Graecia with a series of variants: coins, with the lion's hindlegs off the ground scratching H.'s thighs (1823); in the 4th cent. the old motif of the use of the club (1825-1827) sometimes with H. fighting from r. to l.; and less common variants are: the lionpaws falling limp (1812. 1824) or slight changes in H.'s pose (1818).

All these 5th and 4th cent. scenes are in two-dimensional art and the simpler versions have the figures in profile (1811-1819. 1825) but usually they follow the mode of the day and are given in three-quarter view which emphasises the strangling. This suits three-dimensional renderings and the scheme is usually taken to be that of Lysippus' lost group in Alyzia (Dodekathlos 1709), which was taken to Rome. This is supported by the Poulydamas base at Olympia (Paus. 6, 5, 1; Olympia III 209-211; Moreno, P., Lisippo I fig. 14) and later derivatives (v. Salis 38; Loeffler, E., Marsyas 6, 1950-53, 11 ff.; contra Moreno 141, and see below). The basic type serves the whole Hellenistic period, the prevailing style or medium or personal preference determining variants on the three-quarter view (1816. 1818. 1823. 1824). The turned lion's head on 1824 is an isolated variant, not a throw-back to the Archaic.

In the homeland the Labour had no great significance outside the Dodekathlon but this is not true elsewhere, especially in south Italy where similar, old-fashioned fighting schemes enjoyed a long popularity.

Wrestling on the ground was an invention of Attica in the third quarter of the 6th cent. and it supplemented the dominant Peloponnesian invention of the standing fight. Exekias was perhaps the inventor (Boardman 14) and other painters soon followed his lead (1869) until it became the most popular scheme for red figure artists. H. is naked, fighting from the l. (reversed on 1874) kneeling on one or two knees or pressing both feet against the ground (Marwitz 78-79) as he seizes the lion's neck in his l. arm and the lion lifts a hindleg to H.'s head. This is the basic scheme which has three variants (mainly between 520 and 500): H. links hands (1851-1859); seizes the l. hindpaw with his r. hand (1860-1863); has his r. hand beneath the lion's belly (1864-1868). Less common variants are: dragging open the lion's jaws (1869, about 540) and later with the Kleophrades P. (1870); r. hand unoccupied (1871, about 500); the lion's hindlegs inactive (1872. 1873, after 500). 1875 is unique with H. holding both forepaws.

Attending figures again do not intervene; they may be better integrated in the group (1854. 1858. 1860) though they are usually at either side. Athena and Iolaos are usually present (1857. 1861. 1862), sometimes Hermes and the nymph Nemea (1853. 1858. 1860; → Hermes 500-504). Attendants increase in number especially where the field is a long frieze, as on hydria shoulders or crater lips (1853. 1861 [Cab. Méd. 254]. 1866), and may be seated (1866). Landscape elements are important (1854. 1861. 1863), trees or branches which fill the central upper space and serve to carry H.'s clothes and useless weapons. Rocks probably indicate the lion's cave (1855. 1863 [Jatta 1600]) but the type barely outlasts the 6th cent. except in the work of a few painters (1871. 1873) and disappears in the second quarter of the 5th cent. Paus. 5, 11, 4 does not tell us whether Panainos used the scheme on the probably long shallow friezes of the side screens to the Zeus at Olympia (1924; cf. v. Salis 15). The ground-fight recurs once in south Italy (1876) but in a variant unknown in Attica, fighting side by side, from l. to r.

Apart from vases the scheme appears seldom in relief, with variants: on 1878 the lion lies on its back and tries to fight off H. with its l. forepaw while H. drags open its jaws and the lion's head is frontal (as it is on 1877 with the variant of the linked hands). 1880 may or may not be a lying fight.

Other varieties of the wrestling may be observed. There are very rare late Archaic combinations of the standing and lying scheme: on 1881 H. kneels stooping over the cowering lion and on 1882 he stands stooping over the half-rearing lion. The bent sword on the ground refers to the lion's invulnerability to weapons.

The dominance of the standing or lying schemes is shown by the failure of any other type to rival them in frequency; e.g., the very few (1883-1886) scenes with the lion on H.'s shoulder. On 1884 and 1885 he has raised the beast, on 1883 and 1886 he throws it to the ground. This complicated composition has a short life, from about 520 to 500. Not surprisingly, it appears in the work of the Andokides Painter (1883), a pioneer of such involved schemes in rf. It is an open question whether this demonstrates his dependence on major painting (cf. Schauenburg 2, 104).

There are other isolated variants of the wrestling: on the theatre frieze at Delphi (1888) both stand frontally, the lion between H.'s legs; on 1887 the kneeling H. holds the lion horizontally before him.

2. The fight with weapons

Beside the wrestling schemes especially favoured in late Archaic bf. new schemes of the fight, using weapons (especially the club) develop, but in far fewer numbers. As other established iconographical schemes begin to lose favour at this time, this does not imply some new version of the story: the club is mentioned first much later ([Theokr.] 25, 255, though cf. Peisandros, Davies EGF F 1 = FGvH 16 F 4). It is more probably a reaction to the new freedom offered by the relaxing of Archaic formulae.

Two new schemes appear. In one H. pursues the cornered lion into his cave, in the presence of Athena, Hermes or Iolaos. All examples are from the Athena P.'s workshop (1889), where the scheme must have been invented. Later, in the second half of the 5th cent. similar scenes appear in which landscape elements are important though the moment of action has changed (1890. 1891) and attention is concentrated on H. and his companions, while the lion is a shadowy accessory (1891) or its identity may even be doubted (1892).

More commonly the weapon is used in the facing fight, a scheme starting in the mid 6th cent. (1893) but most favoured in the last quarter of the century (1894-1898) which it hardly survives (except outside the homeland: 1899). There are variants: H. stands to attack the lion which springs or runs at him (1893. 1894. 1896), H. attacks the rearing lion with club or sword (1895); they crouch before each other (1897). This scheme of the fight with weapons, with the figures separated, is the least distinctive. It was not invented for this episode but appears in many other late archaic schemes for a fight. It often remains uncertain whether it refers to H. and the lion, especially when there are iconographical irregularities. H. is sometimes young and in the pose of a fight with weapons but weaponless. On the same vase (1896) a certain H. (bearded, club, bow) may appear with an anonymous bearded or young lion-fighter (Brommer, Vasenlisten 3 130 Ae; Bérard, C., Etudes de Lettres 1984, 413).

There are other isolated scenes: the round field of 1903 places H. hovering over the running lion; on 1900. 1902. 1903 H. holds the lion upside down to club it; the pose of the lion on 1905 is not clear; and in Hippotion's dedication (1906) it seems that H. was shooting at it.

A very few Greek scenes ignore the fight itself. On 1915 Hera sends Iris with the lion to Nemea; on 1916 H. skins the dead beast; on 1918 he drags the dead lion to an altar; on 1921 he sits on it; on 1922 he carries it on his shoulders (like the Erymanthian boar). None of these schemes has successors. Only the Olympia metope (1919) with the completed Labour and H. with his foot on the dead lion, might have influenced 4th cent. scaraboids (1920), and more remotely the calyx crater 1917 where he sits above the dead lion. These exceptional scenes simply emphasise how dominant was the fighting scheme, especially the standing frontal type, which was surely also the scheme for the monuments now known only from texts (Dodekathlos 1701. 1709. 1710). The failure of the post-Archaic artists to develop any radical new scheme for the fight must have contributed to its relatively slighter popularity in Classical and later periods.

ROMAN

The standing facing fight remains the most popular and in the Roman period depends mainly on the Classical scheme with H. upright, pressing the lion's head to his chest (type 1 b iii). There are two main types, mainly dependent on differing media - two- or three-dimensional. One is developed in the mid 1st cent. A.D. (1926. 1935) and persists throughout the Roman period (1926-1929). All examples in the round are of this type (1935-1940) and the groups on Dodekathlos sarcophagi (1939. 1940; Dodekathlos 1714. 1722. 1723. 1725. 1731-1733; an exception Dodekathlos 1752). H. is usually bearded, moving l. but looking r., with the lion in a headlock. It usually scratches H.'s r. arm with its l. forepaw (but inactive on 1929. 1930) and his l. (1926. 1934) or r. leg (1935: relief, v. Salis 21 fig. 11) with the l. hindpaw. Sometimes the hindlegs are off the ground (1935: Lenin-grad, Florence, Cologne; Dodekathlos 1723. 1731).

Von Salis (38) has suggested that this was the type of the Lysippan group at Alyzia (1709, cf. Loeffler, o. c. 1709, 11-13) for its similarity to the Poulydamas base (Moreno 123 fig. a) and the fact that it is used for works in the round and on sarcophagus reliefs (and the Herculeum frieze, 1926), where the series of Labours are thought to depend on the Lysippan group. The suggestion is plausible (contra Moreno 141) and Lysippus is thought to have used other established Dodekathlon schemes for Alyzia. But these reflections do not allow a detailed reconstruction of the original group; the formula is of its period (Künzl 75) and heavily imposed in translation to other media like reliefs and painting. And there are slight variants: on 1941-1943 the lion leaps on H. obliquely from the l.; on 1941 H. lays his l. hand on the lion's back; on 1943 he drags open its jaws, with his r. hand beneath its neck; on 1944 the lion is not upright.

On 1945-1949 there are greater variations. H.'s pose is much the same but the lion leaps more from the side (1945-1948) or behind (1949), with its hindpart hidden behind H. H. grasps its head in the Archaic manner (1945-1947. 1949) thus turning it to the front (on the modest 1948 dragging open its jaws). These scenes are most popular in the 2nd half of the 2nd cent. but appear also later (1947) and are especially suitable for fountain figures (1949).

The second variety of the standing fight (1951-1969) has them in profile, H. bending over the lion, both hands round its neck pressing the head against his chest; its head then appears beneath his arm in profile or slightly frontal. The lion again fights back with forepaws (or they are inactive: 1961. 1964. 1965. 1967) and hind (1952. 1955. 1958). Sometimes H. lifts it from the ground (1954. 1956. 1963. 1964. 1969; Dodekathlos 1752; relief, Athens NM 3280). This is a version for reliefs, perhaps determined by the medium, like the Hellenistic relief scenes (cf. the lion-fighter of the Pergamum frieze: v. Salis 13 fig. 7). The basic scheme begins in the Augustan period (1952. Dodekathlos 1745) and persists through late antiquity and beyond (1967). There are two types, with H. fighting from r. to l. (1951-1958), and the reverse, no doubt influenced by the facing fight (1954. 1966) with H. turning more, from l. to r. (1959-1969). Sometimes the lion throws back its head (1962). These are simply variants on the basic scheme and do not derive from different prototypes (contra v. Salis 8).

Other schemes for the fight are rare. The facing fight with H. kneeling, which was used for round compositions, appears on some coins (1970). The lying fight is ignored: apart from 1971 which presents other problems – an Attic sarcophagus which harks back to a purely late Archaic scheme.

The fight with weapons is also rare. 1974 and 1976 combine the wrestling with the fight with club, as had some Greek scenes. 1973-1975 divide the figures who fight facing or from the side: all are late Imperial.

Where Greek art concentrated on the fight itself, Roman art introduces a scheme for the victorious H. with the dead lion. He stands frontal holding the lion upside down, by head or tail, club in raised r. hand (1977. 1978). This appears in the round and on sarcophagi. Moreno sees in this the Lysippan scheme at Alyzia, with the Gnathian 4th cent. vase (1918) providing the link. But it has yet to be established that there was a Greek tradition for this scheme since the few examples which are roughly related (1900. 1902. 1903. 1918) have a different narrative intent, and there is such a long gap between 1918 and the Roman scenes that any association of them with Alyzia must be doubtful. They seem wholly innovative.

There remain a few unconventional scenes, somewhat removed from the standard schemes. 1988 is based on the standing fight but has no action; 1984 recalls the late Archaic scenes at the cave (cf. 1979); 1986 is a variant of the round Greek composition with H. kneeling, but the lion is inactive; 1987 is a variant of the triumphant H. but with the lion alive. Others borrow schemes from other Labours: the lion, like the boar, on H.'s shoulders on 1981. 1985; or H. kneeling on its back and drawing back its head, like the deer's on 1982. 1989.

As in other Labours, the Roman iconographic range is relatively limited but it did contribute one radical new scheme in the triumphant H. with the dead lion.

WASSILIKI FELTEN

C. Herakles and the Lernaean Hydra (Labour II)

Eurystheus ordered H. to slay the Hydra, a many-headed monster in the marsh of Lerna. H. may be assisted by Iolaos, who attacks the Hydra with harpe/sword or burns the severed necks, so that no other heads can grow.

LITERARY SOURCES: The first mention of the Labour is in Hes. theog. [313-318]. H., assisted by Iolaos and advised by Athena, slays with a sword the evil-minded Hydra, the third child of Typhon and Echidna (also Hyg. fab. 30, 3), brought up by Hera, who bore a grudge against him. The Hydra is described as: nine-headed (Alk. fig. 443 Voigt; Apollod. bibl. 2 [77] 5, 2; Hyg. l.c.; Suda s.v. Ὑδρα; Serv. Aen. 6, 575; 7, 658); fifty-headed (Simonides, Page PMG fig. 569; Palaiph. 38 Festa; Verg. Aen. 6, 576; Myth. Vat. II 163); hundred-headed (Eur. Herc. 1188; Phoen. 1135; Diod. 4, 11, 5; Verg. Aen. 7, 658; Sil. 2, 158; Sen. Herc. O. 1534-1535); three-headed (Serv. Aen. 6, 575); many-headed (Eur. Herc. 419-420. 1274; Verg. Aen. 8, 300; Q. Smyrn. 6, 212; Anth. Pal. 16, 92, 2; cf. POxy 2454, 25?). According to Paus. 2, 37, 4 the Hydra had originally only one head, the many-headed Hydra being the invention of the epic poet Peisandros (late 7th cent. B.C.; Panyassis l.c.) to make the monster appear more horrible.

«Apollodorus» gives a detailed description of the Hydra Labour (bibl. 2 [77-80] 5, 2) following mainly Diodorus (4, 11, 5), who relates the story briefly. According to Apollodorus the Hydra's den was on a hill by the spring Amymone in the swamp of Lerna (Paus. 2, 37, 4 under a plane tree; 5, 17, 11). From there she went into the plain to ravage the cattle and the country. H., on a chariot driven by Iolaos, came to Lerna and shooting at the Hydra forced it to emerge (Verg. Aen. 6, 803). H. cut the Hydra-heads but with no result, because where one head was cut off, two grew (Eur. Herc. 1274-1275; Nonn. Dion. 25, 198; Diod. 4, 11, 5; Palaiph. 38 Festa); according to Serv. Aen. 6, 287 three heads grew (cf. Ov. her. 9, 95-96; Lucanus 4, 635; Sen. Ag. 835-836; Martialis 9, 101, 9); according to the Suda s.v. Ὑδραν τέθειεν many heads grew. Then H. thought of sealing the wounds with fire. This was done by Iolaos (Eur. Herc. 421; Ion 194-198; Diod. 4, 11, 6; Schol. Eur. Phoen. 1137; Q. Smyrn. 6, 215-219; Schol. Stat. Theb. 2, 377; Suda l.c.). A crab sent by Hera hindered H. by biting his leg (Panyassis, Davies EGFF 3; cf. Schol. Arat. phain. 147; Hyg. astr. 2, 23, 1; Hellan. FGH 4 F 103). H. trod on the crab to get rid of it, and later it joined the Zodiac (Panyassis l.c.; Schol. Arat. phain. 147; Ps.-Eratosth. kat. 11; Hyg. astr. 2, 23, 1; Sen. Herc. O. 67). H. buried the middle immortal head under a huge stone in the road to Elaeus. He dipped his arrows in the poisonous Hydra-gall (Soph. Trach. 714-718; Eur. Herc. 1187-1188; Diod. 4, 11, 6; Serv. Aen. 6, 287; Hyg. fab. 30, 3; Paus. 2, 37, 4). H. was wounded by the poison of Hydra and was cured in Phoenicia (→ Belos). After that he built there a town named Ake. Eurystheus, however, did not accept this task as one of the ten Labours of Herakles because he had been helped by Iolaos. Palaiph. 38 Festa (Tzetz. chil. 2, 237-264) interprets the Hydra Labour as a metaphor of a historical event at a town called Hydra with a king named Lernos and a warrior Karkinos. Another realistic interpretation connects this Labour with the draining of the swamp of Lerna (Serv. Aen. 6, 287; Schol. Stat. Theb. 1, 384).

ROMAN

In Roman art only H. and the Hydra are shown (exceptions are 2063, 2069, cf. 2068). The Hydra may be represented in the traditional form (not further described here) or as a female bust and head with limbs and hair ending in snakes. H. is almost always naked, with a club, holding the Hydra by a neck or hair. The Hydra's tail is often coiled around his leg.

Hydra with woman's head from which many snake-heads grow. The subject is common on sarcophagi; see SarkRel III 1, 117–118. For examples where the Hydra has a woman's head see [Dodekathlos] 1715–1717, 1719–1721, 1730; on [Dodekathlos] 1718 it has two snake arms and four snakes in hair; on SarkRel III 1 no. 118 the body ends in two snake heads; on ibid. no. 119 there are two snakes in the hair, like Medusa. The Hydra is «normal» on [Dodekathlos] 1722*, 1723*, 1734*, 1752*, with five to nine heads. H. is usually at the l. (except [Dodekathlos] 1720*, 1721*, 1724*, 1730*, 1734*) and is young on [Dodekathlos] 1716*, 1721*, 1724*, 1734*. H. also holds a bow on [Dodekathlos] 1725* and SarkRel III 1 no. 128.

Hydra as victim

The monster is shown as victim alone on [Dodekathlos] 1739, 1742, 1750 and Walters, BMSilver-Plate no. 191.

COMMENTARY

The Hydra Labour is one of the earliest mythological representations in Greek art, possibly inspired by the much earlier representations of an analogous subject in the east (Brommer, H. 12, with n. 10; Bisi, A., Mél. Carthage 1964/5, 21–42). It is already depicted on the so-called Boeotian fibulae of the end of the 8th/beginning of the 7th cent. B.C. (2019, 2020).

There H. and Iolaos fight a Hydra, represented as a huge, many-headed snake. The crab, sent by Hera, appears between H.'s legs. The next representations are to be found in the last quarter of the 7th cent. B.C. (2025, 2054) at a time when the series of Corinthian vase-paintings begins. On these vases Athena is often also represented standing beside H. (1990–1992, 1994, 1995). A second woman (1990, = Hera according to Amandry/Amyx 111) or other persons (1991, 1993, 1995) also occur; and the horse/horses (1990, 2011) or the chariot/chariots (1990–1993, 1995; sometimes with driver, 1991), also the crab (1990, 1991, 1994); birds, sirens, lizards, which appear in some pictures, are probably filling ornaments (Amandry/Amyx 112). These persons may also be shown in the representations in Attic bf. where H. is usually shown fighting the monster alone (2032a [frr.], 2033) or helped only by Iolaos (2012–2015). On Early Corinthian vases the scene was also sometimes reduced to heroes and Hydra (2011). On Attic vases Hermes also may be shown (1998, 1999; cf. 2007, Eretrian bf.), once the local Nymph Lerna (?) on 2006, a demon (2000) or perhaps Zeus (2028). On Tyrrhenian amphorae Iolaos, instead of attacking the monster, is shown arriving on a chariot (1996, 1997) or horse (1998); a scene probably influenced by the Archaic poros pediment on the Athenian Acropolis (2021).

In the Archaic period the Hydra Labour was also represented on Laconian black-figure cups, of which only fragments are preserved (2035) and a Sicilian polychrome fr. (2032). The one representation on an Eretrian vase (2007) seems to follow the Attic scheme, while on a Caeretan hydria (2016) H. is shown using his club. This motif occurs for the first time on a Corinthian vase (Paris CA 3004, see 1995); later, on the poros pediment on the Acropolis (2021) and on a gem (2045) of the mid-6th cent. B.C.

From the 5th cent. B.C. on the representation in rf. vase-painting is confined to H. alone with the monster (2036–2039), once on either side of the vase (2036). Iolaos is rarely present (2009, 2017, 2018) or the nymph Lerna (2009; cf. 2006).

From the mid-6th cent. B.C. on the Labour appears regularly as part of the Dodekathlon. In Classical and Hellenistic art the Labour may also be represented on its own: on architectural reliefs (2042), on votive-reliefs (2041, 2044), gold (2053), gems (2046), and on coins of Phaistos (2055) showing H. fighting the monster alone (except for 2023 where Iolaos is represented as well). Details of the marble statuary groups by Polykleitos (2056) and Lysippos (Dodekathlos 1709) or the iron one by Tisagoras (2057) are not known; some suggestions, however, have been made (cf. Voegtli 22, 49; Moreno). In the Roman period, as well as the traditional type of the Hydra, there appears for the first time the representation of it with a female bust/head with limbs/hair ending in snakes: (cf. Robert, SarkRel III 1, 117–118; Jacopi, I., ArchCl 24, 1972, 292–295). This motif has been assumed to derive from the Polykleitan statue (2056). The anthropomorphic representation would accord with the general tendency of the time for humanisation of monsters (cf. Floren, J., Studien zur Typologie des Gorgoneion [1977] 177–190). Others suggest an unknown Hellenistic model for the same type or Lysippos (cf. Moreno).

In the Roman period H. is regularly shown fighting the Hydra alone (exceptions 2063, 2069, cf. 2068) with the club raised over his head as part of the cycle of Labours. The Labour also appears on its own: in painting (2058) with a tree recalling Greek prototypes; on architectural reliefs (2066, 2067); on altars or other stone reliefs (2069–2071); on clay relief vases (2077–2080); on gems (2072–2075); lamps (2081–2083); metal utensils and coins, especially of the East Greek cities (2085–2088). On coins it may appear as a symbol of Imperial authority, defeating the snakes of conspiracy (Vermeule, C. C., Numismatic Studies 5, 1, 1983, 17). In the Roman period also a caricature is invented in statuettes showing H. as an old man or dwarf with phallos ending in Hydra-heads (2091).

H.'s appearance. Until the end of the 6th cent. B.C. H. is usually represented bearded wearing long or short hair sometimes bound with a fillet. At first he is shown naked (2019, 2020), but later either naked or dressed. He is shown striding towards the Hydra, sometimes running (1997, 1998, 2045). In Attic vase-painting H. is always shown dressed in a short chiton, often wearing the lionskin over it, once wearing a himation over his shoulders (Bonn 358, see 2005). Sometimes H. wears a corselet (Palermo NI 1708, see 1995, 2021), as well as greaves (2007, 2016), also a helmet 2020, 2054. From the 5th cent. B.C. to the end of the Roman period H. is shown naked, sporadically wearing the lionskin, once with helmet and shield (2077). In the Archaic period the motif of the lionskin hanging from H.'s outstretched l. arm appears for the first time (2024); it is shown once in Attic vase-painting (2038) and is adopted in the coins of Phaistos in the 4th cent. B.C. (2055). This becomes very common in Hellenistic and Roman representations.

H.'s weapons. In early representations as well as in Corinthian vase-painting H. attacks with the sword (cf. Hes. theog. 313–318), exceptionally with the harpe (1990) or the club (Paris CA 3004, see 1995). On the chest of Kypselos H. was represented shooting at the Hydra (2031) (cf. Apollod. bibl. 2, [78] 5, 2 and 2036). In Attic vase-painting H. regularly uses the harpe, sometimes the sword; at the end of the Archaic period the club also (2005, 2030, 2038, 2039; cf. 2021, 2045), once the bow (2036), stones (2030). Alone on 2040 he holds a torch. From the end of the 5th cent. B.C. on H. is shown attacking with the club raised while holding the Hydra with the l. hand. Exceptionally H. later uses the knife (2073?) or the sword (2088). Very often H.'s other weapons are shown in the field beside him; sometimes H. is shown holding bow/arrows in the l. hand (2038, 2082; [Dodekathlos] 1725, 1739, 1747).

The Hydra. The number of the Hydra heads varies greatly; to the 5th cent. B.C. it is usually shown with nine, then with seven heads. However, there are many exceptions: 2019 (six heads); 1990, 2029 (ten); 2947 (eleven); [Dodekathlos] 1722 (five); 2077 (three); cf. Amandry 311; Robert, SarkRel III 1, 117–118. The Hydra's tail is very often coiled round H.'s advanced leg, even round H.'s body (Palermo NI 1708, see 1995; 1993, 1994). Sometimes the Hydra is shown coiled round a tree (2030, 2036, 2040, 2058, 2082). It may be shown biting H. (Palermo NI 1708, Paris CA 3004, see 1995; 1990, 1996, 2014, 2018, 2025, 2066); in that case the crab is regularly not present. H. is often treading on the Hydra's tail, or kneeling on it (2013, 2044, 2045, 2062, 2076), once on a rock (2090).

In the Roman period when the Hydra is represented with a female bust/head H. is shown in the traditional scheme holding it by the neck with his l. hand. Exceptions: 2089 with the head lying on H.'s shoulder; Dodekathlos 1754 with H. holding the cut head; the coin, Voegtli pl. 2r (Alexandria, Ant. Pius) with it supplicating H. for mercy.

Athena. In Corinthian vase-painting Athena is often represented holding a vase (1992 and Paris CA 3004, see 1995) either with refreshment for the hero after completing his task (Amyx, D. A., in Moon (ed.), AGAI 48) or to collect the poisonous Hydra blood (Boardman, J., OJA 1, 1982, 237–238; Carpenter, T. H., OJA 3, 1983, 51). In Archaic Attic vase-painting Athena is almost always shown armed, sometimes even running to the fight (2012–2014, 2030). On Tyrrhenian amphorae she is shown holding a vase (1996) (probably under Corinthian influence), a wreath (Paris C 10506, see 1997), branches (1998). Twice she is represented seated (2005).

Iolaos. In Archaic art, when not mounted on a chariot/horse as on Tyrrhenian amphorae and the Acropolis pediment (1996–1998, 2021), Iolaos is shown attacking with the harpe, once with the bow (2003); also with the spear (1998). From the end of the 6th cent. B.C. on he is represented holding torches (2002, 2004, 2008, 2009, 2014, 2015, 2017, 2018, 2023). In Archaic Attic vase-painting he is often shown as a hoplite (1996, 2002, 2003, cf. 2007).

Landscape is sometimes alluded to by trees (1009, 2005, 2045, 2053, 2068) or with birds and fishes (1995, 2019). The fire set by Iolaos to burn the Hydra stumps (2004, 2016) is rarely represented, as is a column suggesting a building (1990, 2085).

Generally it may be remarked that the representations of the Labour through the various periods of Greek and Roman art illustrate eclectically all the literary evidence about the task; while persons (Lerna, Hera, Hermes, others) or other details (landscape, architecture, Athena involved in the fight) are added, freely invented to enrich the picture.

G. KOKKOROU-ALEWRAS

D. Herakles and the Erymanthian Boar (Labour III)

H. has to capture alive the wild, violent boar that lives on Mt. Erymanthos, and bring it alive to Eurystheus at Mycenae. When he delivers the monster the king hides himself in fear in a pitthos.

LITERARY SOURCES: The earliest references to the Labour appear in a frag. of Hekataios (FGrH I F 6) and in Soph. Trach. 1097 (date unknown). Later literature adds details but is inconsistent in placing it in the series. Diod. 4, 12, 1–2 with the fullest account, names the boar's home on Mt. Erymanthos, Lampeia; he stresses that it must be caught alive, as do Apollod. bibl. 2 (83) 5, 4, 1 (followed by Pediasimos 4, 10) and Q. Smyrn. 6, 220–222; but Hyg. fab. 30, 4 says the boar was killed. In Diod. (l. c.) the capture is the result of a carefully planned attack; in Apollod. bibl. 2 (87) 5, 4, 8 it was driven out of the undergrowth by noise and caught in the snow (also Pediasimos 4, 11); and Polyainos 1, 3, 2, with a similar story, adds cunning and stone-throwing. It was brought to Mycenae (Herodotus, FGrH 3 I F 24; Diod. 4, 12, 2; Apollod. bibl. 2 [87] 5, 4, 8) and Diod. adds that Eurystheus hid himself in a vessel in fear when he saw H. approach with the boar on his shoulder. Other sources add little: Schol. Stat. Theb. 4, 298; Claud. (?) laus Herculis 103–117; Tzetz. chil. 2, 268; Tabula Albana, FGrH 40 F 1c. From Martialis 9, 101, 6 H. seems to wear the boarskin as well as the lionskin; and in Dracontius Romul. 2, 96 Hylas is dressed in it. Its tusks were shown in the temple of Apollo at Cumae: Paus. 8, 24, 5.

COMMENTARY

Unexpectedly, the principal theme in the Archaic period is not the fight with the boar but its carrying-off, alive, an important element in the literary sources also. The earliest scenes are not Attic (2135, 2136) but their fragmentary state means that we cannot tell exactly which scheme they represent, only that H. is carrying the boar on his l. shoulder belly-up (2135) or legs-up (2136), but not whether this was part of a bigger composition. Just before the mid century two schemes crystallise. In one H. carries the boar on his l. shoulder, head to rear (2108, 2110) or forward (2109, 2112), legs up. This is seen first on an Attic cup of about 560 (2108) then in the mid 6th century (2109) and remains popular throughout the Archaic period though less popular than the second scheme. The latter is the most characteristic with H. bringing the boar on his shoulder to Eurystheus who has hidden in fear in a pithos, first mentioned in literature in Diod. 4, 12, 2 and presumably the same vessel, a bronze vase, which other sources say he prepared against H.'s return with the Nemean lion (see Lit. Sources to H. and Lion). Most scenes of this type belong to one of two successive variants: on 2113-2121 H. approaches the pithos in which Eurystheus is hiding, on 2122-2134 he sets his foot on the pithos ready to drop the boar in. The type appears fully first in the Peloponnese by the mid 6th cent. (2114, 2118, 2136) where it may have been devised (Kunze, Schildbänder 104–106). It also appears early elsewhere in Greece (2135) and in the west (2113). In Attica it appears first about 530 (2115, 2116) and is never quite forgotten (2120, 2121) elsewhere, but about the end of the third quarter of the 6th cent. Attic vases adopt the second variant, which is the more dramatic. A few examples just before 500 have the boar's head to the rear (2129, 2130; New York 41.162.190, ABV 287, 1, Add<sup>2</sup> 75; Madrid 10914; ABV 336, 18). The Attic scenes are usually enhanced by other figures: seldom Athena alone (2128), and she is usually with Iolaos (2123), Hermes (2126; cf. →Hermes 507, 508), Artemis (Madrid 10914 ABV 336, 18), Dionysos (Detroit 1964.148, Para 164, 11bis) or figures such as Eurystheus' mother (2124, 2129, 2130) or father (2129, 2130). Less commonly Hermes alone appears with one of the figures named (2125); there are rarely mere bystanders (2122, 2127). That gods attend tells against a humorous interpretation of the scheme (Brommer, Herakles 19; contra, Herrmann, H. V., Olympia [1967] 27–28). This is the standard type for Attic vases for the rest of the 6th cent. and on a few late Archaic rf. vases (2129, 2131).

The end of the 6th cent. sees a loosening of the standard formula and admixture of other schemes, none long-lived. So, H. may trundle the boar on its forelegs, usually in Athena's presence (2102, 2103), or with Iolaos and Hermes (Würzburg 182, ABV 327, 4). The image seems related to that used for animal offerings (Deubner, L., Att. Feste [1932] 44 pl. 2; Wegner, M., in Aparchai, Studi P. E. Arias [1982] 201 type 1; cf. also 1410). The association with animal offering recalls other Attic scenes with H. (1332*). On 2105 the scheme is combined with a fleeing Eurystheus and empty pithos, but on 2106 there is the empty pithos alone, which recalls the Pholos episode with the wine pithos, while on 2107, where Eurystheus again appears, the rock beyond the empty vases again recalls the setting of Pholos. The fighting schemes of other Labours are also borrowed, with attack with weapons from the front (2097–2100), behind (2102) or side (2101). Wrestling is especially popular in the Haimon Group (2093–2095); the weapon is usually the club (2095) and on this vase there is a further reminiscence of another H. episode in the Amazons at either side (Bothmer, Amazons 106). The Classical period brings no novelty and of the Olympia metopes 2133 is the only one that exactly observes the Archaic scheme (Herrmann, o. c. 144). The few examples, singletons or in a series, use one or other of the basic Archaic types (2111, 2121, 2132, 2134). Nor does the Hellenistic bring anything basically new, but prefers H. alone with the boar (2112). Unusual types appear on relief vases whence, perhaps encouraged by the mould-technique, alien schemes are adopted for the Labour: thus on 2096 where the identity is based on the other H. Labours on the same vase. Confrontations with a boar with weapons are characteristic of scenes involving Meleager or Theseus and these types, even where anonymous, can probably always be ignored in considering H. and the boar. It is also possible for a boar-hunter to adopt a Heraklean pose, without being identified necessarily as H. Compare, for example, the H. with the Hydra on the guttus, Louvre H 263 (CVA 15 pl. 28 [1016], 12) with the boar hunter on Louvre MR 609 (ibid. pl. 28, 3).

The two basic Greek types remain popular in Roman art. One group has H. carrying the boar feet-up (on its side, 2148), the hero usually with a club (2141–2145); another has Eurystheus in his pithos (2149–2158). The narrative connection between the two is often lost, however (though on 2159 H. has his foot on the pithos in the old manner) and generally the appearance is of a poorly interrelated set-piece. It is not surprising that in some scenes Eurystheus is no longer visible in his pithos (2161, 2162) or that he might be replaced by a woman, his mother, wife or daughter (2150, cf. 2149 and →Admete 3–5). 2166 seems novel, where the boar appears sleeping, and 2169 where we have only the boar with its head stuck in the pithos; but these are exceptional and isolated. Other arts, perhaps more readily influenced by literature or the stage, abandon traditional schemes and show new aspects of the story: on 2165 H. drives the boar from its cave; on 2168 he carries it before him; on 2167 it lies at his feet; on 2164 Mercury and Fortuna attend and the boar at H.'s feet defines the Labour. The boar-skin as dress is implied in 2171, 2172, as in Martial. In general, however, the role of the Labour in Roman art is mainly confined to its appearances in the Dodekathalon.

E. Herakles and the Kerynitian Deer (Labour IV)

H. has to capture the deer with the golden antlers, sacred to Artemis, and bring it to Eurystheus at Mycenae.

LITERARY SOURCES: A central feature of the literary record is the long pursuit of the deer before its capture. Pindar (O. 3, 25–32) following Peisandros (Davies EGFF 4) has H. follow the deer to Isthia. In Eur. Herc. 378 he kills it. The later record deals with the adventure as one of the Labours and generally agrees that the deer was brought live to Mycenae: Diod. 4, 13, 1; Apollod. bibl. 2 (81–82) 5, 3; Hyg. fab. 30, 5. The capture was effected with nets (Diod.) or after a hunt (Pind.) to which Diod. adds that the beast was either asleep or exhausted. In Apollod. he follows the deer for a whole year and wounds it before capturing it, incurring thereby the wrath of Apollo and Artemis, which he appeases since he was acting under orders from Eurystheus. The deer is dedicated to Artemis in all sources from Pindar on (where Taygete dedicates it): Pherekyd. (FGrH 3 F 71); Q. Smyrn. 6, 225–226; Tzetz. chil. 2, 265–267; in Eur. Herc. 377–379 he dedicates it to Artemis after killing it.

Most sources agree on the unnatural feature that the deer (called δορκάς in Eur. Herc. 376 but otherwise ἐλαφος), though female, had antlers, and gold at that: Pind. O. 3, 29; Eur. TGF<sup>2</sup> fig. 740, 2; Peisandros l. c.; Pherekyd. l. c.; Diod. l. c.; Apollod. l. c.; Q. Smyrn. l. c.; Tzetz. l. c. Eur. Herc. 375 calls it χρυσόκάρανον. Hyg. l. c. is the exception in making it male. Eur. Herc. 376 and the Tabula Albana (FGrH 401 F 1c) say it was dappled. There are few other details about the deer. Eur. TGF<sup>2</sup> fig. 740, 3 says the Labour was dangerous and in Herc. 377 that the deer had laid waste fields; and too Q. Smyrn. 6, 226, who adds that it had a fiery breath. Its speed is remarked by Diod. l. c., Q. Smyrn. 6, 223 and Serv. Aen. 6, 802.

The home of the deer and setting for the capture are variously named. Pind. O. 3, 26 has the capture in Isthia and the lands of the Hyperboreans but in the course of time the Peloponnese becomes the setting for the Labour. In Eur. Herc. 378 H. dedicates the dead deer at Oinoe in the Peloponnese. In Apollod. bibl. 2 (81) 5, 3 the deer was in the temple of Artemis at Oinoe and H. follows it to Mount Artemision and the river Ladon. In Hyg. l. c. it lives in Arcadia and Sen. Ag. 831 calls it cerva Parrhasis, i. e., Arcadian. The epithet Kerynitian appears first in Apollod. l. c. followed by Herakleitos all. 33 p. 49, 6 Oelmann and Serv. Aen. 6, 802. This must indicate its origin, either the Achaean town Keryneia or a mountain of the same name (Kall. h. 3, 109) where there lived a deer sacred to Artemis which was then identified as the one fought by H. (cf. Gruppe 1037; Bölte, F., RE XI 1, 347; Schefold, SB II 101).

COMMENTARY

Attic vases provide the main basis for the iconography of the scene in Greek art. Non-Attic versions range from the 7th to 5th cent. (2205-2208) but they are neither uniform nor do they follow the Attic models; rather, they borrow common hunting scenes for the story. The identification of such scenes is much disputed (Hampe 42-44; Brommer 3, 21, and 2, 479-481; contra, Fittschen, Sagendarstellungen 62; cf. also Brein, F., Der Hirsch in der gr. Frühzeit [1969] 150-154) since the hero is not clearly characterised, and the fabulous feature of the female beast with antlers, which is specified for the Kerynitian deer also in literature, can appear also in generic hunt-scenes (cf. the Eretria gold band: Vienna Kunsthst. Mus. M 124; Ohly, D., Gr. Goldbleche des 8. Jh. vor Chr. [1969] pl. 13, 2). These scenes therefore play a minor role in study of the subject.

The first mythical scenes which can be associated with the subject (Kenner 47; Beckel 53) show H. disputing possession of a roe, less often a hind, with Apollo (2174-2180). Such scenes probably also appear outside Attica (Kunze, Schildbänder 126) but the state of the material involved renders identification uncertain, and we have to rely upon the Attic vase scenes, from 560 on. Two schemes emerge, both current to the end of the century. In the older the deer stands between H. and Apollo (2174, 2175); in the latter which gains popularity in the last quarter of the century, both move in the same direction, H. with the deer under his arm and Apollo trying to take it from him (2176-2180). Athena and Artemis generally support H. and Apollo (2175-2177, 2179), and sometimes Hermes is present (2178, 2180). The identity of the woman on 2174, with no attributes, is uncertain, but in other scenes Artemis takes no part in the action and stands behind her brother, so this is likely to be Athena (Beckel, 53; contra, Brommer 3, 23, and → Artemis 1315). Irrelevant figures appear on 2180. In literature Artemis owns the deer but on the vases it is Apollo that fights for it (see also discussion in LIMC II p. 308). Apollod. bibl. 2 (82) 5, 3 comes closest in having H. confront both deities (cf. Albizzati 7). Moreover on the scenes (2174-2176, 2178-2180) the deer has no antlers while literature is clear that it had a golden horn, while the scheme is borrowed from a different story, that of the struggle over the tripod. The difference between the literary and artistic treatment of the event has led some to posit a different, lost literary version of the story (Pfuhl, MuZi 322; Brommer 3, 23; contra Beckel 53, who warns against over-emphasising the differences). Others divorce the episode from that for the Kerynitian deer and assume a story related to that about the tripod (Parke/Boardman; Boardman, ABFH 224), the deer (of whatever sex) and tripod being interchangeable objects of dispute (cf. also Schefold, SB II 100).

It must not, at any rate, be overlooked, that at the time of these scenes there begin (about 560) in Attica indisputable scenes of the Labour with H. capturing the antlered deer without the use of weapons, as is usually described in literary sources (except Apollod. l. c.), and the creature is no longer a mere attribute of the quarrel between god and hero. The development is one observed in other Labours, H. becoming more closely involved with his quarry alone - here the deer.

In the Archaic period there are two successive schemes. The earlier, which runs to soon after 500, has H. moving in the same direction as the deer and seizing its antler. The early scenes are dramatic (2181, 2182) with H. running beside the deer, seizing its antler with one hand and with the other, like a wrestler, taking it by the neck (2181) or foreleg (2182). The compact scheme may be in part dictated by the restricted field (Schauenburg, 2183) but is in keeping with the close body-contact of other H. fights.

The later scenes (2183-2185) are more tame with H. striding beside the deer and holding its antler. White paint shows that this is golden (2183). 2185 is more vigorous with H. pulling back the deer's head by its muzzle, but the deer is antler-less. This feature appears in both schemes (2188, 2196, cf. also 2202) and shows that art is not following literature (cf. Lezzi-Hafter 87). Similarly, the deer may be shown male (2191, 2204). The role of the gods also deviates from literary sources. Artemis (2181, 2183) appears as often as her brother (2181, 2185), and Athena plays her usual role in H. Labours (2183, 2184). Hermes appears on 2187. The exceptional number of other gods attending 2181 reflects the unusual treatment of myth narrative in this class of vases (Tyrrhenian). Otherwise there are few attendant figures except in the work of the Swing P. (2186; for another view of these figures, Apostolaki 333), but on the vase there is no certainty that H. is involved since the man is beardless. One might think of Apollo, who shares some of H.'s characteristics (quiver, short dress), and a transference of roles with Apollo pursuing the Delphic deer (cf. Parke/Boardman). Yet when the painter uses the same scheme on 2187 the bearded figure behind the deer is surely H., despite lack of attributes (Böhr, o. c. 2186, 40), and we are probably dealing with the painter's well-known readiness to deviate from traditional schemes (ibid. n. 390).

In the late Archaic period the old scheme is re-worked, and the new scheme appears first on the Athenian Treasury (2200). Some details are not clear (pose of H.; antlers) but later examples of the new tradition define the type: H. usually naked, to the r., kneeling on the back of the collapsing deer pulling at its antlers (2189-2195; its ears on 2188). This scheme makes clear that the beast is captured by the hero's strength alone.

Scenes of H. and Athena standing quietly with a deer (2201, 2202) are to be distinguished from those where the deer is a mere attribute (as ABV 279, 47; 338, 1; cf. ML I 2, 2189 s. v. «Herakles»; and a filling figure on vases such as Malibu 86.AE.75; Para 111, 14 bis; Add 61; Mommsen, H., Der Affekter [1975] pl. 87). They seem rather to belong with scenes where H. displays his quarry to the gods (contra Schauenburg, K., Jdl 94, 1979, 61).

A very few late Archaic scenes borrow or confuse other schemes. On 2203 the attack is from the front. On 2204 there is conflation with the Hesperides (cf. ML I 2, 2200; Robert, Hermeneutik 274; Brein, o. c. 58). In the Classical period the second Archaic scheme is generally observed. The overpowering of the beast is the main theme and on the metopes at Olympia and Athens (2190, 2191) the only deviation is that H. pulls the beast's head up, its antler down. In another new variant of the scheme H. uses weapons, beating the deer with his club while he holds it by antler, muzzle or neck (2196-2199).

On rf. vases the traditional group is enhanced by other figures. On the Late Archaic cup 2189 a figure with bow and arrow could be Iolaos holding H.'s weapons or Apollo. For the latter speaks his appearance on other vases (2185, 2196, 2197) where, however, he is accompanied by Artemis, a figure as important as her brother on Classical vases (though not in literature, as we have seen). Athena, however, loses her leading role; she appears once, on 2197, with Apollo and Artemis and a youth. This vase adds an altar and palm tree, localising the event in Delphi, it may be. It suggests the existence of a Delphic deer (Orlandini, P., Cronache [1964] 20; Giglioli, G. Q., NotSc 1919, 23). But the artist, the Kadmos P., is fond of giving his scenes a Delphic setting (cf. Lezzi-Hafter 88). In general the Classical scenes with H. using weapons come closest to the version in Apollodorus where he wounds the deer and meets Apollo and Artemis. In the Classical period the episode can be shown within (2190, 2191) and apart from (2189, 2196, 2197) the cycle of Labours but from the 4th cent. on it is securely associated with them. If the epigram in the Anth. Pal. (2192) refers to the group from Lysippos' series at Alyzia (2211), then this is also true of the model for the most famous plastic scheme of the event, and remains authoritative in its two variants (2193-2195 without club, 2199 with club). There are few deviations: 2209 and 2210, from the late 4th and the 2nd cent., do not have the overpowering of the animal, but are fragmentary and uncertain, but they do appear in the context of the Labours and both show a mighty deer.

In the Roman period the scenes on sarcophagi (2223) form the closest group and the overpowering motif remains dominant to late antiquity (2213-2230). H. is naked, usually to the r. (but see 2220). He usually has his l. knee on the fallen deer (the r. on 2223a) and pulls its antlers down with both hands. There are variants here too, also met in the Greek series: on 2220, as at Olympia (2190) he pulls an antler down with one hand and with the other lifts its head; and he may use his club (2231-2233) as on Attic rf. vases.

In Roman art the deer has horns and may even be shown male. Thus the fine bronze group in Palermo (2215) which had been long thought a true copy of Lysippos' work at Alyzia (v. Salis, o.c. 2215, 8 n. 4; Bieber, SculptHell 36; Arnold o.c. 2215, 237 n. 812, 242). However, Lysippan features in the group are weak (Johnson, F., Lysippos [1927] 191) and its familiar scheme finds its place easily in Roman art, so the association cannot be upheld (cf. Künzl, 147). A unique version appears on 2227, where the main group is added to by other figures which can hardly be other than Artemis and Apollo, heavily influenced in their iconography by the origin of the work in Egypt.

A few minor works from the east show H. capturing the deer (2234-2238). These are unusual in that H. demonstrates his domination by holding an antler but makes no use of the club in his other hand (except perhaps on 2238). H. appears in different poses, catching it on the run (2234) or standing beside it (2235). We do not know whether these scenes derive from major sculpture, emphasising the capture of the deer, as on Attic bf. (thus G. Ortiz on 2234). 2239 is wholly novel, with H. shooting the deer and 2240 is peaceful, with H. standing beside the deer. The Piazza Armerina mosaics (2241) often display unusual schemes for H. Despite the few works of minor art the representations of the Labour in the Roman period are securely associated with the main cycle of the Labours.

F. Herakles and the Stymphalian Birds (Labour V)

H. has to clear Lake Stymphalus of birds, which he does either by frightening the birds off or by killing them.

LITERARY SOURCES: Peisandros of Kameiros (Davies EGFF 5), Pherekydes (FGH 3 F 72), Diod. (4, 13, 2) and Apoll. Rhod. (2, 1052-1057) say that H. drove the birds away by making a terrible din. Apollod. (bibl. 2 [93] 5, 6) says that the rattle he used was made by Hephaistos and given to him by Athena, but Hellan. (FGH 4 F 104b) credits H. with devising it himself. Apollod. (l.c.), Strabon (8, 6, 8 p. 371) and Tzetz. (chil. 2, 291-292) say that H. used the noise to flush the birds so that when they fluttered into the air he could shoot them with arrows. The birds were reputed to be man-eating (Peis. l.c.; Paus. 8, 22, 4) or to shoot their feathers out like arrows (Hyg. fab. 30, 6; Serv. Aen. 8, 299). No ornithological identification of the birds will be attempted here.

b) without lionskin (possibly another subject)

2250. Green jasper scarab, Greco-Phoenician. Cagliari Mus. From Tharros. - Furtwängler, AG pl. 15, 76. - 5th cent. B.C. - A naked youth kneels to shoot; bird on r. border. Perhaps not H.

3. Herakles alone, standing frontal, shooting an arrow upward, usually with lionskin over his arm

a) facing r., two or three birds to r., falling

2263.* Glass intaglio. London, BM. - Walters, BMGems no. 3156. - 1st cent. B.C. - Man grasps a bird by the neck to the r. and threatens it with an upraised club; another bird to the l.

6. Herakles with Athena

2265. (= [Dodekathlos] 1705** with bibl., = Athena 529b*) Marble metope on the Temple of Zeus at Olympia. Olympia Mus. - Paus. 5, 10, 9; Ashmole, B./Yalouris, N., Olympia (1967) pl. 153. - Completed by 456 B.C. - H. standing at the r. holding his bow in one hand, with the other offering a bird (or birds) to Athena, seated on rocks at l.

2266.* (= 2839, where the identity is doubted) Bell krater, Apulian rf. Kiel, Kunsthalle B 537. - RVAp I 73, 61a: close to Adolphseck P.; Schauenburg 21-27 pl. 9, 1; Trendall, RFSIS fig. 111; Vollkommer 8 fig. 12. - 380-360 B.C. - H. stands at l. with foot raised on a rock, shooting an arrow at an unusual bird at the r. Athena seated at the r., above the bird.

7. Herakles with Eurystheus (?)

2267. Clay relief lamp. London, BM 972. - Bailey, BMLamps II Q 1322, 334 pl. 72. - 2nd cent. A.D. - H. facing r. shooting upward. To the r. a tree and r. of it, a bird. L. of H., seated male figure (Eurystheus?), with another bird flying over his head. A third bird lies between H.'s legs.

8. Birds as victims (without Herakles, except 2269, 2271)

2270. Handle of a trulla, silver plate. London, BM. - Walters, BMSilverPlate 50 no. 191 fig. 51. - 2nd cent. A.D. - Two birds; one on either side of the handle beside the attachment, with five other victims of labours.

9. Uncertain

a) Certainly Herakles, but not necessarily related to the Stymphalian birds

2273.* Bronze statuette. Würzburg, Wagner-Mus. H 5185. - Menzel, H., JbRGZM 22, 1975, pl. 40, 4. - Roman. - H. wearing a lionskin over his head, shooting an arrow to the r. (as Type 3).

b) Bird or birds present, but the man unlikely or uncertain to be Herakles

2275. Jug, Attic geometric. Copenhagen, Glypt. 3153. - Brommer, H. 25 pl. 18; Schefold, Sagenbilder fig. 5b; Carter, J., BSA 67, 1972, 52; Fittschen, Sagen-darstellungen 64-65; Twele, J.R.A., AJA 81, 1977, 103-107. - 750-700 B.C. - At the far l. a man holds a bird by the neck, while other birds proceed to the r. Brommer, Schefold and Twele consider this to be a mythological scene; Carter and Fittschen doubt it.

2276. Lekythos, Attic bf. Munich, Antikenslg 1842 (J 1111). - ABV 455; Haspels, ABL 195, 8 pl. 9; Blackneck Class; Brommer, H. pl. 19. - Late 6th cent. B.C. - Man at l. with club in one hand, holding bird by the neck in the other; small figure at the r. uses a sling or a club (looks like a pygmy fighting a crane rather than Iolaos).

2277. Skyphos, Boeotian bf., Cabirion style. Amsterdam, Allard Pierson 582. - CVA Scheurleer I pl. 3 (22), 2. - 4th cent. B.C. - Man pursuing a bird, its feet tethered, with a stick or flail.

2278. Vase, probably rf. (shape and fabric unknown). - Tischbein, W., Coll. of Engravings... Hamilton (1791-95) II 18. - Man wearing an animal skin, probably a lionskin, flanked by birds as tall as he is (cf.

2280. (= 1913) Bronze fibula, Boeotian. London, BM 3204. - Brommer, H. 25 pl. 3. - Late 8th cent. B.C. - Two figures side by side, each holding a bird by the neck in the l. hand. The larger at the l. may also be holding a bird in the other hand. Other birds in the field. Fittschen, Sagen-darstellungen 64-65, nn. 339-345, believes that the figures are women and cites others who doubt that this representation is related to H. and the Stymphalian birds.

2281. AE coins, Lamia (Thessaly), 300-190 B.C. - BMCThessaly 23, 12 pl. 4, 3; Rogers, E., The Copper Coinage of Thessaly (1932) 126, 387/388 figs. 200/201. - Rev.: as Type 2 b. (Obv.: head of nymph.) On Rogers no. 387 the figure turns to shoot r. Rogers argues that this is Philoktetes (cf. Voegtli 29).

2282. AE coin, Maliensis (Lamia), 400-344 B.C. - BMCThessaly 35, 3 pl. 7, 6; Rogers, o.c. 2281, 125 no. 384 fig. 197. - Rev.: as Type 3 b. Possibly not H. but Philoktetes. (Obv.: head of Athena.)

2283. Bronze statuette, London, BM 1304. - Hellenistic. - Man holding a bird on his outstretched l. arm, which is wrapped in drapery. The other arm is raised as if to strike, but not necessarily to strike the bird.

COMMENTARY

If the geometric jug (2275) and the fibula (2280) showing a man or two men throttling birds are intended to illustrate the story of H. and the Stymphalian birds, these are among the earliest representations of the Labours in art.

The theme can be identified with certainty only from the mid 6th cent. B.C. when three very similar amphorae (2241, 2242) were painted showing H. using a sling to attack a colourful mass of fluttering birds. 2243 and 2244 still show H. using a sling in the early 5th cent., helped by Iolaos.

H. is first shown using a bow, his preferred weapon for this labour in literature and all later art, on (2245). He is there shown kneeling, a position favoured in representations of this labour on gems (2247, 2248, 2250).

The quiet scene of H. standing beside a seated Athena after the completion of the labour, on the metope at Olympia (2265), is extraordinary and unexpected. Athena appears again, seated, in the Apulian krater in Kiel (2266), but the composition there is very different and H. is actively shooting a bird.

Praxiteles did not include this labour in his decoration of the pediment of the Temple in Thebes (Paus. 9, 11, 6; [Dodekathlos] 1710), but it is possible that Lysippos created a statue showing H. shooting the Stymphalian birds for Alyzia ([Dodekathlos] 1709). Loeffler (followed by Moreno) has argued that his creation may have been the inspiration for our type 3. If type 3 is a reflection of the front view of Lysippos' creation and type 4 of the back view, this had an enormous influence on later renderings of the theme in many media.

No extant representations show H. merely driving the birds away (as suggested in some literary versions of the story); he is always attacking them. Q. Smyrn. (6, 227-231) seems to be describing the most prevalent type of representation «Nearby were the loathesome Stymphalian birds. Some, hit by arrows, were breathing out their lives in the dust, others still interested in getting away, were swooping through the grey sky. Angry Herakles was shooting one arrow after another at them...».

If a H. is not identified by his lionskin and/or his club, it is possible that Philoktetes is intended (2279, 2281, 2282). Some confusion with pygmies fighting cranes is also possible (2262, 2276, 2278).

SUSAN WOODFORD

G. Herakles and the Augeian stables (Labour VI)

H. is obliged to clean the filthy stables of King Augeias of Elis.

LITERARY SOURCES: Pind. (O. 10, 28-30) contains the earliest extant reference to H.'s service to Augeias. It is but an allusion and, unfortunately, very vague. Pindar does not specify, as do later authors, that H. had to perform the labour without the help of any other man (Diod. 4, 13, 3) and within the space of a single day (Diod. l.c.; Apollod. bibl. 2 [88] 5; 5; Hyg. fab. 30, 7) nor what means he used, nor even the exact nature of the task itself.

Most later authors explain that H. cleverly diverted one or more of the nearby rivers to run through and thus purge the unwholesome stables (Apollod. l.c.; Q. Smyrn. 6, 234-235; Hyg. l.c.; Diod. l.c.; Paus. 5, 1, 10; Tzet. chil. 2, 281-286). Even when the use of a river is not mentioned (Kall. fig. 77 Pf.; Schol. Apoll. Rhod. 1, 172-173) no author suggests that H. actually shovelled out the dung himself. Diod. (l.c.) explains that to have done so would have incurred disgrace, and that H. devised his ingenious engineering stratagem in order to foil Eurystheus' intended insult. Augeias refused to pay H. the price that had originally been agreed, according to Paus. (5, 1, 10) because H. had used cunning rather than toil, according to Apollod. l.c. because H. had been under constraint to perform the labour for Eurystheus.

2. Herakles facing r. leaning forward and working to r., arms lowered, with a vessel tipped to r. at his feet

2293. (= [Dodekathlos] 1725* with bibl.) Asiatic sarcophagus. Konya Mus. 1002. - Boysal, o.c. 1725, pl. 47. - Early 3rd cent. A.D. - H. uses implement to direct water (?) into vessel tipped to the r. at his feet.

3. Herakles standing frontally with an implement over his shoulder and a container by his feet

a) movement slightly to r., head turned back to l. Basically the same type with only minor modifications on Roman sarcophagi, [Dodekathlos] 1715* - 1717*. 1720*. 1721* (Moreno 129 fig. 3; 160 fig. 38). 1722*, mid to late 2nd cent. A.D.

b) as a but l. arm is lowered, r. arm raised with fist clenched as H. looks back, presumably threatening Augeias (because of his refusal to pay?).

2294. (= [Dodekathlos] 1718* with bibl.) Sarcophagus. Florence, Uff. 145. - SarkRel III 1 no. 104 pl. 29. - About 200 A.D. - Vessel between H.'s legs. Cf. the sarcophagus in Paris (= [Dodekathlos] 1719) where H.'s fist is raised more prominently.

c) Herakles frontal, but head and body gently turned to l.; implement over l. shoulder

2295. (= [Dodekathlos] 1734* with bibl.) Sarcophagus, Roman. - Florence, Uff. 110. From Rome. - SarkRel III 1 no. 113 pl. 31. - About 150 A.D. - Water flows from an urn beneath H.'s hand (presided over by a river god) into a container at the bottom l.

d) as c but turning to r.; implement held in lowered r. hand

2296. (= [Dodekathlos] 1730* with bibl.) Sarcophagus, Asiatic. Rome, Mus. Torlonia 420. - SarkRel III 1 no. 126 pls. 35-37. - A.D. 150-200.

4. Herakles standing with one foot raised (like the Lysippan Poseidon)

2297. (= [Dodekathlos] 1747*) Marble relief. Vatican 444. From Palestrina. - Amelung SkulptVat-Mus II pl. 80. - 2nd cent. A.D. - H. faces r.

2299. (= [Dodekathlos] 1749 with bibl.) Stone relief. Toulouse Mus. From Chiragan. - Reinach, Rép-Rel I 100, 3. - About A.D. 200. - H. faces l., his further foot resting on a container that looks like a basket, a pick in his hand.

5. Herakles seated

See also 927-949 and discussion there on the Lysippan type (here, 2300). On the mosaics from Cartama and Acholla ([Dodekathlos] 1742. 1739) the type is borrowed for Acheloo, it seems; see Gozlan, S., RA 1979, 55-59.

2300. (= LIMC IV p. 773, with bibl. and discussion). Statue by Lysippos (presumably the one from Tarentum taken to Rome, then Constantinople) described by Niketas (Overbeck, SQ no. 1472) as seated on a basket over his lionskin, dejected, head on hand, elbow on knee.

2301. (= [Dodekathlos] 1736*) Marble base. Rome, Mus. Cap. 205. From Albano. - 1st cent. A.D. - H. facing r., l. arm and l. leg bent; he is seated on a container (that looks like an inverted pail) on which he has placed his lionskin.

6. With Athena

2302. (= [Dodekathlos] 1705** with bibl.) Marble metope on the Temple of Zeus at Olympia. Olympia Mus. - Ashmole/Yalouris, o.c. 1705, pls. 202-211. - Completed by 456 B.C. - H. facing l. wielding an implement to shovel or lever (thus Ashmole); Athena's spear, held parallel to the implement, gives moral support or a practical indication (or both).

7. Other scenes

2303. (= [Dodekathlos] 1728*) Gold bell. London, BM Jew. 3008/9. From Tarsus. - A.D. 200-250. - H. stands facing r. holding an implement in his lowered r. hand; a container beneath the implement.

2304.* AE coin, Alexandria, Antoninus Pius. - Voegtli pls. 7k, 12r; Bräuer pl. 4, 1. - Rev.: H. advancing r. his arms extended; lionskin on shoulders, club slung on l. side; before him a rocky fountain with a lion's head spout from which water flows. Before it, a rake. H. is washing after the labour, identified by the rake.

2305.* AE coin, Herakleia Pontou, Geta. - Voegtli pl. 7 l. - Rev.: H. striding to r. with a long rake in his hands which he is wielding like a spear. Cf. Herakleia Pontou, Gallienus; Voegtli pl. 14 o.

COMMENTARY

The least popular of all H.'s Labours, the only one which involved no worthy adversary nor even a hint of danger, the cleansing of the Augeian stables was seldom represented. This local Elian myth, which stands apart from all the other deeds of the hero, may have been inspired by some Mycenaean engineering feat (Baker, J. M., AJA 78, 1974, 149). It probably became part of the canonical cycle simply because it appeared among the metopes decorating the Temple of Zeus at Olympia (Brommer, H. 62), but it never really captured the imagination of the general run of artists.

The Olympia metope (2302) is the earliest extant representation and is as difficult to interpret as the earliest extant literary reference (Pind. O. 10, 28-30). It is no longer clear whether H. is sweeping (to clear manure), shovelling (either to remove the dung or re-channel the river) or levering (a procedure that could only be related to diverting rivers). This representation seems not to have had any influence on later ones.

Lysippos, in the 4th cent. B.C., appears to have been the only major artist to represent this Labour (2300; Overbeck, SQ nos. 1468-1472). Characteristically he chose to show the weary H., seated on a basket. The nature of the activity that wearied the hero remains ambiguous. The basket may have been used to remove the manure or to carry earth away in order to divert a river or rivers. The Lysippan image seems to have inspired some of the earliest extant representations from the Roman period (2301). No Hellenistic representations have been preserved.

The Augustan «Tazza Farnese» (2292) is the earliest extant monument to show H. making use of a receptacle of the kind that later becomes characteristic. It is usually shaped like a basket or a pail (though it can sometimes be more rounded). It is often decorated with linear patterns that suggest basket-work, even when it seems to be employed as a container for water.

From the 2nd cent. A.D. on, artists portraying the cycle on sarcophagi, in mosaic or in other media generally relied on an attribute (a basket or pail and/or some implement - fork, hoe, rake, pick or spade) to identify the Labour. Graphic prototypes were scarce. The Lysippan type (Type 5) was used early, but only rarely.

Most artists chose to show H. actively at work (Type 1), pick in hand, with some sort of receptacle on the ground (a representation that suggests river-routing); sometimes water is caught in the container (as if H. had carried the water of the river from one place to another instead of diverting the entire flow - or perhaps this was the only way artists found to represent the diverting of a river). Twice H. appears to be threatening (an imagined) Augeias with upraised fist (2294). Augeias' failure to pay the hero led to the war which was often of more interest (especially in literature) than the Labour. Other artists just show H. standing with a container and/or an implement, this being considered sufficient to identify the Labour.

The lack of any coherent imagery for this Labour is striking.

H. Herakles and the Cretan bull (Labour VII)

H. has to capture and bring to → Eurystheus the Cretan bull.

LITERARY SOURCES: Most sources have the bull caught by H., taken to Mycenae and then set free:

Diod. 4, 13, 4 (H. taken to Greece on its back); Apollod. bibl. 2 (94-95) 5, 7; Hyg. fab. 30, 8; Sen. Ag. 833-834; Paus. 1, 27, 10; Tabula Albana, FGrH 40 F 1c; Auson. eccl. 24 Prete; Schol. Stat. Theb. 5, 431; Serv. Aen. 8, 294; Anth. Pal. 16, 92, 8; Nonn. Dion. 25, 227-229; Anth. Lat. 627, 8 Buecheler/Riese; Myth. Vat. 147; II 120; Tzetz. chil. 2, 293-298; Pediasimos 7. A different tradition has H. kill the bull: Verg. Aen. 8, 294-295; Anth. Pal. 6, 115; 16, 93; Claud. (?) laus Herculis 118-137.

Akusilaos, our earliest source (FGrH 2 F 29) identifies the bull as that which brought → Europe (I) to Zeus in Crete. In Diod. 4, 77 the bull is of Minos' herd, and in Apollod., Tzetz. and Pediasimos (l.c.) it emerges from the Cretan sea at Poseidon's order. In Claud. (?) laus Herculis 118-137, it has a celestial origin. It was identified with the bull loved by → Pasiphae and with the Marathonian bull (Diod. l.c. and 4, 59, 6; Apollod. l.c.; Hyg. fab. 30, 8; 38, 7; Ov. met. 7, 433-434; Paus., Schol. Stat., Serv., Myth. Vat., Tzetz., Pedias., l.c.). Its exceptional ferocity is recorded, either natural – shaking the walls of the cities of Crete with its bellows (Claud. rapt. Pros. 2, praef. 33-34), or breathing fire and scorching the fields (Q. Smyrn. 6, 236-240; Anth. Pal. 16, 92; Serv., Claud. [?] l.c.), or killing those it encountered in Greece, like → Androgeos, son of Minos (Paus. l.c.). Some describe it as handsome (Diod. 4, 77, 2; Apollod., Serv., Pedias. l.c.), white in colour (Schol. Stat., Myth. Vat. l.c.) or enormous (Tabula Albana). According to Diod. 4, 13, 4 and Apollod., Pedias. l.c., Minos encouraged H.'s attack.

GREEK

The catalogue is arranged in broad iconographical types with the main variants represented. The list is extremely selective in the area of Attic bf. Brommer lists over 250 examples in Vasenlisten<sup>3</sup> 194-203, many of them repetitive, especially on later bf. lekythoi. On a number of the bf. scenes also the possibility of confusion with → Theseus and the Marathonian bull cannot be resolved.

1. Herakles attacks the bull with weapons

a) with a sword

2306.* Hydria, Attic bf. Berlin (DDR), Univ. D 715 (F 1898). From Vulci. – Late 6th cent. B.C. – H. prepares to plunge his sword in the neck of the bull kneeling before him. Bow and quiver hang. H. is watched by Athena, Hermes and a woman, all seated. Cf. the bf. skyphos, Brussels, Mus. Roy. A 1983; Haspels, ABL 85 n. 1; CVA 3 pl. 25 (119), 2a; this may not be ancient.

b) with a stone

c) with a club

2308.* Column crater, Italiote bf. Berlin (DDR), Staatl. Mus. F 2137. – Dubois-Maisonneuve, M., Introd. à l'étude des vases antiques (1817) pl. 34; Neugebauer, Führer Berlin II 35. – Early 5th cent. B.C. – H. faces the bull and holds one horn.

2309.* Louterion, Attic rf. Athens, Agora P 12641. From the Agora. – ARV<sup>2</sup> 1043; near the Curti and Peleus Ps.; Para 444; Shefton pl. 105a-d; Vollkommer 2, 148 fig. 2. – About 440 B.C. – H. with lionskin over l. shoulder, l. hand on bull's lowered neck. Behind him Athena and a youth (Iolaos?); beyond the bull a woman; behind it a man (Minos?); palm tree (?).

2310.* (= Athena 460, = Europe I 218*) Calyx crater, Attic rf. Adolphseck 77. From Sicily? – ARV<sup>2</sup> 1346, 1; Cecrops P.; Add<sup>2</sup> 368; Brommer, H. pl. 22; CVA 1 pls. 46-48 (524-526); Hausmann pl. 54; Vollkommer 10 fig. 14; idem 2, 154 fig. 5. – Late 5th cent. B.C. – H. with quiver and lionskin over l. arm threatens the bull which charges him. He is crowned by a small Nike. Apollo and Athena, seated, watch, and Nike, and a veiled woman (Europe?). Palm and olive trees.

2313. Marble relief. Berlin (DDR), Staatl. Mus. From Pergamon. – AM 24, 1899, 163-164 no. 11; cf. Pergamon VII no. 398. – 2nd cent. B.C. – H. with lionskin over l. arm, the bull beyond him, in opposite direction. Watched by seated woman.

2314. Clay mould. Agrigento, Mus. Reg. From Agrigento. – RM 12, 1897, pl. 11. – Late 4th cent. B.C. – Bull (head indistinct) crouches to l. Behind it H. swings club across his body, lionskin on l. arm. Cf. Isler, H. P., Acheloos (1970) 25.

2315. (= [Dodekathlos] 1711*) Clay relief bowl. Once Berlin, Staatl. Mus. 3161g. From Anthedon. – H. (probably holding club) kneels on bull's flank holding one horn.

2316.* AR didrachms, Selinus, mid 5th cent. B.C. – Bräuer pl. 3, 12; Hausmann pl. 50, 1; Kraay/Hirmer, GrCoins pl. 67, 187; Vollkommer 11 fig. 15. – Obv.: Young H. on near side of bull, holds one horn. Rev.: river-god Hypsas (→ Hypsas I with bibl.).

2. Herakles restrains the running bull

There is the possibility of confusion here with H. leading a bull to sacrifice; see 1334.

2317.* Cup, Laconian bf. New York, MMA 59.15. – Stibbe, LakVas no. 300 pl. 104, 1; Rider P.; Pipili, LacIc 4 fig. 6. – 550-540 B.C. – H. approaches the bull from the r., holding it round its neck. Cf. Paris, Louvre, E 666 (Pipili, o.c. 5 fig. 7) where H. is on the far side of the bull, and moving r.; and two other examples by the Rider P. (Market and Kiel B 515; ibid. nos. 9, 10).

2319.* Lekythos, Attic bf. Palermo, Mus. Reg. 1894 (G. E. 1896, 2). – ABV 385, 30; Acheloos P.;

Haspels, ABL pl. 15, 4. – About 510 B.C. – H., fully dressed, runs on the far side of the bull. Watched by Athena and a woman with sceptre, both seated.

2320. (= Hermes 510) Oinochoe, Attic bf. Once Suippes, Bourgeois-Thierry. – ABV 385, 29; Acheloos P.; Gerhard, AV pl. 98, 3-4. – About 510 B.C. – H., fully dressed, beyond the bull, holds a horn and puts one hand to its muzzle. Hermes in front.

2321. Cup, Attic bf. Naples, Mus. Naz. 81129 (H 2773). From Etruria. – CVA 1 pl. 30 (974), 1-3. – About 510 B.C. – A: H. beyond the bull, holds its horns. B: = 2326.

2322. (= Hermes 493a) Hydria, Attic bf. Paris, Louvre F 299. – ABV 362, 29; Leagros Group, Painter A; CVA 9 pl. 72 (411), 1; Schefold, SB II 103 fig. 128. – Late 6th cent. B.C. – Young H., wearing quiver and sword, behind the bull, holding it beneath the belly. At l. Athena and Hermes; H. and boar.

2323.* Hydria, Attic bf. London, BM B 309. From Vulci. – ABV 364, 56; Leagros Group; CVA 6 pl. 81 (340), 2. – Late 6th cent. B.C. – H., fully dressed, on near side of bull, holds one horn and has r. hand on its flank. Club before. Hermes, Athena, Iolaos and a woman watch, all seated.

2324.* Skyphos, Attic bf. Olympia Mus. BE 634. From Frankonisi. – ABV 521; Theseus P. or near; Hausmann pl. 49, 1. – About 500 B.C. – A: H. on near side of bull holds a horn and a foreleg; Athena. B: = 2348. For the pose cf. New York 1906.1021.59; CVA 4 pl. 46 (774), 13 (ABV 605, 5).

2325. Kyathos, Attic bf. Cambridge, Fitz. Mus. GR 8.1927. – ABV 613, 42; Group of Vatican G 57; CVA 1 pl. 21 (259), 2. – About 500 B.C. – H. beyond the bull, holds horns.

3. Herakles captures and ties up the bull

a) The bull kneels before him

2326. (= 2321) B: H. ties a rear leg.

2327. Neck amphora, Attic bf. Turin, Mus. Ant. 4106. From Vulci. – CVA 2 pl. 6 (1790), 1-2. – 520-510 B.C. – B: H. kneels on bull's neck and ties three legs. Club, bow, quiver hang. A: = 2337.

2328.* Neck amphora, Attic bf. Munich, Antikenslg. 1583. From Vulci. – CVA 8 pls. 407, 2; 409, 2. – 520-510 B.C. – H. ties rear legs. Bow and quiver hang.

2329.* Amphora, Attic bf. Munich, Antikenslg. 1407. From Vulci. – ABV 290; cf. Group of Würzburg 199; CVA 1 pl. 37, 2; Brommer, H. pl. 21a. – About 510 B.C. – H. wears sword, ties muzzle and left legs. Iolaos with sword and club, another club against his leg. Bow and quiver hang.

2330.* Neck amphora, Attic bf. New York, MMA 41.162.193. From Vulci. – CVA 4 pl. 35, 5-8. – 520-510 B.C. – A and B: H. fully dressed but no lionskin, ties bull's hind leg (foreleg on B) and genitals. Dress in tree.

2331.* Volute crater, Attic bf. Taranto, Mus. Naz. 20335. From Taranto. – ABV 195, 4; Golvol Group;

AttimGrecia 8, 1967, pl. 15. - Late 6th cent. B. C. - H. holds horn and ties hind leg. Four women run away.

2332. Neck amphora, Attic bf. Mississippi Univ. 1977.3.61, once Baltimore, Robinson. From Caere. - AJA 60, 1956, pl. 4, 20. - Late 6th cent. B. C. - H. wears sword. Hermes.

2333. Neck amphora, Attic bf. Cambridge (Mass.), Sackler Mus. (formerly Fogg) 52.132. - CVA pl. 8, 1. - Late 6th cent. B. C. - A: H. ties horn, muzzle and leg. B: H. ties foreleg and two hindlegs. On A and B club at side, bow and quiver hang.

2334.* Hydria, Attic bf. Leningrad, Hermitage B 5571. - AA 1930, 27-29 figs. 7-8. - About 500 B. C. - H. with chiton and sword, ties muzzle and foreleg. Bow and quiver hang. Club behind.

2335. Oinochoe, Attic bf. Ferrara, Mus. Naz. 16341. From Spina. - CVA 2 pl. 10 (2135), 1. - About 400 B. C. - H. ties left legs. Bow and quiver hang.

2336.* Oinochoe, Attic bf. Bologna, Mus. Civ. 73. From Bologna. - ABV 527, 28: Athena P.; CVA 2 pl. 36 (335), 5. - Early 5th cent. B. C. - H. with sword ties legs. Club, bow, quiver, dress, behind.

b) Other poses

2337. (= 2327) A: H. fully dressed, behind bull, holds a horn and its tied foreleg.

2339. Clay relief bowl. Athens market. - Hausmann, pls. 47, 2; 58, 2. - 2nd cent. B. C. - H. wears lionskin, walks l. on near side of small bull, holds tied muzzle and raised club.

4. Herakles wrestles with the bull

a) The bull kneels before him

In the poorer late bf. versions it is likely that the tying motif (as type 3a) is intended or copied, but not detailed.

2340.* Neck amphora, Attic bf. London, BM B 277. From Vulci. - ABV 343, 8 Michigan P.; Add 94; CVA 4 pl. 70 (215), 1. - Late 6th cent. B. C. - H. wears sword, kneels on bull's neck, holds bull's flanks. Dress, club, bow and quiver at either side.

2341.* Lekythos, Attic bf. Berkeley, Lowie Mus. 8.35. - Haspels, ABL 247, 1: Pholos Group; CVA 1 pl. 27, 3. - About 500 B. C. - As the last. Three Iolaoses with clubs.

COMMENTARY

GREEK

In Minoan/Mycenaean art the capture of bulls, with ropes or nets, or by wrestling with them, was represented in a quite different manner. Evans compares the scenes with H. or Theseus and the bull. Dunbabin had wondered whether 2354 might be the earliest H. with the bull, but the possibility of a Theseus must be admitted, as too with 2314 (or Acheloos) and 2317 (or bulls of Geryon). It is not possible to say which story was first current (Hausmann 69-70 n. 269; Herter). The first possible scenes are Laconian (2317), followed after about 520 by the certain Attic, including few (2306) in which the bull is killed. This is Akusilaos' version, a minor but perhaps early tradition (Robert 458). Generally it is the tying or wrestling that is shown, Types 3 and 4, where there are schemes which seem influenced by scenes of H. with the Lion (on the ground, as Type 4 b) or with the Boar. Some vases carry two scenes of the story (2321 + 2326. 2324 + 2348. 2327 + 2337. 2330. 2333. 2343). The variants in these versions are often difficult to distinguish from scenes of Theseus with the bull, which may begin earlier. Theseus is generally beardless, long-haired, and may use the club, but not quiver, bow or lionskin (Hausmann 69; Shefton 367-368); but see 2318 where a young beardless H. is named. The popularity of Theseus in 5th cent. Athens, inspired politically, probably accounts for the decline in versions of the H. episode (Hausmann 69-73; cf. Boardman, J., JHS 95, 1975, 1-12). The previously separate stories can also become confused in the literary record (Herter, l.c.).

A new sculptural scheme is devised in the Peloponnese, on the Olympia metope (2338) owing nothing to Types 2 and 3, as previously shown. It has few immediate successors, but cf. the Theseus (or H.) and bull on Paris G 526 (ARV<sup>2</sup> 1454, 16) which has been related to Pausias' picture of the sacrifice of a bull (Plin. nat. 35, 126; Hausmann 81-82 pl. 57, 1) and our 2313. This is the period of the Selinuntine coins (2316) on which the scene resembles the Theseus and bull of the Hephaisteion (where there is no H. and bull), which might itself depend on a lost post-Persian war group on the Acropolis (Paus. 1, 27, 9; Hausmann 73-77). After the mid 5th cent. Attic vases present H. facing the bull, 2309-2311. Now too we see a probable Minos (2309. 2311. 2350. 2351), who is recorded as having an interest in the fight. Of the watching women a Europa is identified on 2310 and → Krete (or → Pasiphae) may be among the others (Shefton 336; cf. 2306. 2309. 2313. 2319. 2323. 2343). Four women run on 2331, like Nereids from H. and Nereus or Triton. The occasional trees, particularly the palm (2309. 2310. 2312) may set the scene (Shefton 345). Athena is commonly present; sometimes Iolaos to hold weapons (three of him on 2341!); and more rarely Hermes.

For the Praxitelean group at Thebes ([Dodekathlos] 1710) we might look to the relief bowl from Boeotia, 2315. For the Lysippan at Alyzia ([Dodekathlos] 1709), taken to Rome, it is probably the type with H. taking the bull by horn and muzzle that is involved, a late Hellenistic type most probably, reflected in a rich Roman series, Type 9 b. Another Lysippan work, Krateros' dedication at Delphi (Moreno, P., Lisippo I [1974] 33-36; Picard, Manuel IV 2, 742-745 figs. 314-315) may lead us to 2314. A sculptural type may also lie behind the figures of H. carrying the bull, another late Hellenistic creation well represented in the Roman Type 6, which derives from the scheme of H. carrying the Erymanthian boar to display to Eurystheus.

ROMAN

Eclecticism characterises Roman scenes of H. and the bull, as it does many of the other Labours, whether it is shown on its own, or with other Labours, on works where the interweaving of different iconographic elements from different prototypes produces from time to time new and original versions. It has been held that the carrying of the bull (Loeffler, E., Marsyas 6, 1950-53, 15) attested in Republican and late Imperial times (Type 6), derives from the traditional treatment of H. with the boar. But the Roman period knows two versions of the naked H. in this scene: young, holding the beast with his arms bent before his chest (2358-2360) and young (2362) or mature and bearded (2357. 2363) lifting it on his shoulders. Type 7 follows the scheme for Kerberos dragged from Hades (Fazia, G. M., Annali Bari 19/20, 1976/77, 81-82 figs. 4-6). Types 7, 8 and 9 in fact derive from the Archaic pursuit schemes (Borbein 173) and the type introduced by the Olympia Master with the bodies of H. and beast crossing (2338). But to these two basic schemes are added a series of adaptations which, while unconsciously respecting Greek models, indicate a deliberate search for novelty: in the many versions of the struggle H. is given a great variety of disparate ways of capturing and defeating the beast while the creature itself is shown in the same boringly repetitive gallop. The variants are defined by H.'s attributes and the way he uses his hands, almost always at the bull's side, and almost always either facing the same way as the bull, or frontal, turning the other way. In type 8 he attacks with his club to the r. or l., kneeling on its back (2374-2376), or facing in the opposite direction to the bull (2378-2383). H. brandishing his club while holding the bull's horn is already known in Italiot pottery (2308) and on the coins of Selinus (2316). Distinctions can be drawn between action to the r. (2365. 2369. 2371) or the l. (2366. 2373), or in the position of the hero's club, carried as attribute (2365. 2368) or raised to strike (2367. 2369. 2373); the hero naked, bare-headed and usually bearded, with the usual attributes. To these is added the lamp 2372 with the detail of H. holding the bull's muzzle, and the pteryx 2382 which recalls Olympia (2338), as well as 2378. 2381. 2383. On these last, as on the pteryx with the bodies crossing, the muzzle gesture is avoided. The tying of the bull is exceptional in Roman art, but appears on the Augustan vase 2379 in a group recalling Olympia but the pose of the bull following different models (cf. 2310. 2311; Hausmann pl. 57, 1), and the oscillum 2374 which recalls the Selinuntine coins (2316) and Berlin cup (2315). Detail of the tiny bull on the coin 2370 is not matched but the general scheme goes with 2367-2369. 2373. H. kneeling on the bull seems a speciality of Asiatic sarcophagi of the 2nd and 3rd centuries (2375. 2376), a variant of the type of H. with the deer which appears on the same monuments (Cultrera, G., MemLinc 14, 1910, 249; Loeffler, o.c. 20-21); as well as on the columniated sarcophagi even closer parallels are found earlier on Attic vases (2196) and other Greek and Roman works.

In type 9 H. does not use the club but seizes one or both horns (a), a horn and muzzle moving in the same (b) or the opposite direction (c) to the bull, and in (d) the bull is seated before him. There are connexions and variants within this scheme. On 2384-2386. 2388-2392 H. holds both horns, on 2366. 2387 only one. There is even closer correspondence between the Roman reliefs 2385-2388 and the provincial coinage 2392 in the movement to r. (unlike 2366. 2389) for a period from the 1st to the middle of the 3rd cent. and the variant on cup 2390 seems a speciality of Corinthian workshops. Artists sought other variants in details, such as having H.'s head bare or wearing the lionskin, a distinction already observed on Attic vases (cf. 2319-2325). The motif of H. holding the bull by horn and muzzle (Type 9 b. c) is widespread, in Rome especially on the sarcophagi with continuous friezes, as in the provinces east and west. H. is generally quite naked, bearded and bare-headed (except 2406), but the lionskin may be knotted on his chest or hanging from his shoulders. The motif was already familiar on Attic vases (cf. 2320) and was probably developed in the round by Lysippus at Alyzia (= [Dodekathlos] 1709 and Commentary). The scenes can be divided according to the direction of movement, to the l. (2400. 2403a-c) from Republican to early 3rd cent., to the r. (2393-2398. 2401. 2402. 2403d-2407) from Antonine to the 9th cent. Some sarcophagi are closely linked by the motif of H.'s fingers gripping the bull's nostrils, as on the relief 2397 and the coins 2403a-c which certainly depend on a plastic prototype, probably Alexandrian (cf. Ippel, A., BerlWPr 97, 1937, 38-47; Hausmann 85-86; Todisco 1, 44). Particularly close are the ivory statuette 2404 and the coin 2405, also from Alexandria, in the crossing of the bodies, the scheme of the Olympia metope (2338), perpetuated, as we have seen, in other versions in Rome and throughout the provinces (2377-2383). Again, for the statuette and the coins we may suppose a model in the round, such as the scheme described for a bronze group in the anonymous epigram, Anth. Pal. 16, 105 (cf. Todisco 2, 20 n. 13, 60-61), possibly inspired by a type for Theseus with the bull (Borbein 174-175). The iconography of the contorniates 2408. 2409 is certainly related to the scheme whereby the hero restrains the bull by one horn and muzzle, but the artists have adapted it so that the struggle is virtually body to body and the beast is not galloping but sitting (2408) or on its haunches (2409) resisting H.'s attempt to throw it to the ground. The bull is rarely shown on its own, as victim of one of H.'s Labours (Type 10). At Piazza Armerina the type (2410) must derive from the zodiacal bull, which is common on such monuments and sometimes associated with apotheoses of heroes or Herculean emperors (Gundel, G. H., EAA VII [1966] s.v. «Zodiaco» 1279-1281. 1285 figs. 1409. 1414), a type also adopted by North African mosaicists whose repertory is closely linked to that of the Sicilian villa (Dunbabin, Mosaics 196-212 figs. 155-157. 162).

Finally, there are the monuments of Type 11 found in Italy and the east from the 1st to 3rd cents. One cannot exclude the possibility that the bull's head refers to the Labour (Furtwängler 2243; Downey, o.c. 2412, 49-51), though on 2411 it is better understood as symbol of the beast commonly sacrificed to H. in the Roman period. On the contorniates 2413 the hero takes the bull's horn and muzzle, but in a manner quite different from those of Type 9, and they are placed here because the hero is inadequately characterised and through the lack of detailed parallels with the main series of scenes.

I. Herakles and the horses of Diomedes (Labour VIII)

H. has to bring to → Eurystheus the man-eating horses of the Thracian king Diomedes. He captures or kills them; feeds Diomedes to his horses, or kills him; feeds Diomedes' groom to his horses; loses his favourite → Abderos to the horses.

LITERARY SOURCES: Pindar is the earliest source (frg. 169, 9-46 Snell/Maehler; cf. Lloyd-Jones, H., HSCP 76, 1972, 50-53) where the groom is fed to the horses, which H. drives away. Eur. Alc. 481-506 and Herc. 380-388 dwells on their bloody stalls and fire-breathing; H. brings the horses to Eurystheus. Fullest accounts are in Apollod. bibl. 2 (96-97) 5, 8 where H. kills Diomedes and drives off the horses; followed by Tzet. chil. 2, 299-308; and Diod. 4, 15, 3 where H. feeds Diomedes to the horses. Both horses and Diomedes are killed in Hyg. fab. 30, 9 (where the horses are named - Podargos, Lampon, Xanthos, Dinos) and Q. Smyrn. 6, 245-248. Diomedes is eaten in Sen. Ag. 842-847. The horses were maddened by drinking the waters of the river Kossinitis (Ail. nat. 15, 25); were released to Olympus where they were killed by beasts (Apollod. and Tzet. l.c.); dedicated to Hera and bred from until the time of Alexander (Diod. 4, 15, 4); given by H. to his son Chromis (Stat. Theb. 6, 346-349). Diomedes, the «Thracian», son of Ares and king of the Bistones (Apollod. l.c.; Eur. Alc. 498), built a temple for his father Ares roofed with skulls (Bakchyl. dith. 20); compare → Kyknos (I). See also → Abderos.

COMMENTARY

In Greek art H.'s preoccupation is with the horses, which are only twice unnaturally winged (2416. 2424), and reduced to one (except on 2424) until 4th cent. Apulian (2423) where the scheme may be dictated by the «master of animals» scheme adopted for Apulian Odysseus with the horses of Rhesos (so Moret 189–190) and the same old motif may have inspired the earlier 2424. Two to four horses do not otherwise appear until about 200 B.C. (2425) and where H. drives horses (2432, cf. 2430) they must remain uncertainly identified. At first (late Archaic) he holds the horse (2414–2416) which is shown man-eating only on 2414 and 2415 (but see → Abderos I–4, ringstones which may show Diomedes being consumed). This feature shows that H. with one horse is of this Labour: Robert had suggested H. with the horse Arion (Heldensage<sup>4</sup> 2, 436–437) for these, including the Olympia metope (2419). The scheme with H. beside one horse is the established Classical one (2418–2422), the horse rearing before him later (2426. 2427).

Diomedes appears only in the advanced Hellenistic period (the suggested Diomedes on 2415 is improbable), on 2425 prostrate (if not the groom) and on the Delphi frieze (2427), kneeling in oriental dress. This novelty is underlined by the juxtaposition of the separate scene of H. with a horse. (The H. and Diomedes alleged on the Amyklai Throne, 2428, is surely a misidentification; too early for the motif. Paus. 5, 10, 9 also mentions Diomedes on the Olympia metope [2419] and he is not there.)

In Roman art H. normally attacks directly one of four horses, the others rearing behind him or already fallen. A single or pair of horses rearing before him is a motif for coins (2441). That they are a chariot team is indicated by the wheels on 2425 (Greek, Hellenistic). 2443. 2444b. [Dodekathlos] 1723. 1745. The Greek scheme of H. standing before one horse (2434. 2435c. e) or between rearing horses (2436. 2437. 2439; [Dodekathlos] 1713. 1722. 1723. 1727. 1745. 1752) is a regular element in the group. A horse or horses are quietly feeding or observing on 2445. 2446. Two figures watch surreptitiously on 2442. The collapsing naked youth on 2439 could be Abderos, if so uniquely in these scenes with H. and the horses (perhaps cf. → Herakles/Hercle 236). The Piazza Armerina mosaic (2448) may also be unique in showing the Bistones horsemen defeated by H. (as Apollod. bibl. 2, [97] 5, 8). The horses alone appear on the relief, [Dodekathlos] 1752.

The subject was never very popular, and most scenes appear in series of the Labours and not as individual subjects. This accounts for some lack of originality in treatment. The Greek scheme, with a single horse, was certainly strongly influenced by the commoner representation of H. with the bull. The only innovations thereafter are the showing of a full team of horses, a painter's concept, perhaps, but still based on the «H. with a single horse» group, and the introduction of Diomedes. The way this appears at Delphi (2427) as a separate group from that of H. with the horse suggests a new source of inspiration.

Possibly this was Lysippus' group for Alyzia in nearby Acarnania ([Dodekathlos] 1709) taken to Rome, there to encourage many more representations of H. with Diomedes, with or without horses. These were added either in the alternative scheme of a rearing-collapsing team, or as onlookers in a narrative role.

K. Herakles and the Amazons (Labour IX)

H. is required to fetch the belt of the Amazon queen Hippolyte for Eurystheus' daughter → Admete. His expedition against the Amazons was with an army in which various other heroes participated. The belt episode becomes the core of the labour, especially after the Amazonomachy theme is centred on Theseus in the 5th cent. B.C. See → Amazones I–167. 777–783 for Catalogue and discussion, which are summarised here, with token illustrations.

LITERARY SOURCES: There are repeated indications that H.'s attack on the Amazons was a major expedition in which other heroes took part: Theseus (see below, Section V, B), Peleus (Pind. frg. 172 Snell-Maehler; Schol. Pind. N. 3, 64b), Telamon (Pind. N. 3, 36–39 and Davies EGFp. 161 F 7), Iolaos (Pind. N. 3, 36–39; Eur. Heraclidae 215–217); Sthenelos (Apoll. Rhod. 2, 911–914); Argonauts generally (Hellan., FGrH 4 F 106), and for the general heroic following, Eur. Herc. 408–418; Iust. 2, 4 (cf. Schauenburg 4 n. 1).

The goal was the Amazon capital at Themiskyra (Eur. Herc. l. c.; Paus. 1, 2, 1; Apollod. bibl. 2 [101–102] 5, 9, 7–8; Diod. 4, 16; Tzetz. chil. 2, 309–321) where the fighting took place. Pindar (frg. 172) mentions the quest for «Amazons' belts» and Epicharmus' play Ἡρακλῆς ὁ ἐπὶ τὸν ζωστήρα (CGFI frg. 76–77) refers also. It becomes the central issue of the labour (Eur. Herc. 413–415; Apollod. l. c.; Diod. l. c.; Apoll. Rhod. 2, 778–779. 966–969; Arr. an. 7, 13, 5; and so understood, not necessarily correctly, by Paus. on works he describes, 5, 10, 9 and 5, 25, 11). The belt was golden (Eur. l. c.; Davies EGFp. 161). It was «Ares' belt» to be delivered to Eurystheus' daughter Admete (Apollod. bibl. 2 [98–99] 5, 9; Tzetz. l. c.). In our earliest source, Ibykos (Page PMG frg. 299) the belt belongs to Oiolyke; in «others» (ibid.) to Deilyke. Later it is taken to belong to the Amazon queen Hippolyte, whom H. kills (ibid.) or to Melanippe, who surrenders it as ransom (Diod. l. c. cf. Iust. 2, 4), or was given to H. by Hippolyte to ransom her sister Melanippe, daughter of Ares (Apoll. Rhod. 2, 966–969; cf. Iust. 2, 4). In an epic (Davies EGFp. 161 F 7) Melanippe is killed by Telamon. In Q. Smyrn. 6, 240–245 H. pulls Hippolyte from her horse by her hair, a motif he derives from art. H. dedicated an awning of peploi from the Amazons at Delphi (Eur. Ion 1143–1145) and the belt was displayed in the Argive Heraion (Eur. Herc. 416–418).

I. Herakles attacks Amazons on foot

In the Archaic period H. is commonly accompanied by other heroes and several Amazons are shown, but H. alone with one or more Amazons is the most frequent scheme. There are isolated examples on Corinthian (H. with Iolaos, the leading opponent Andromeda), Laconian, Chalcidian and Thasian vases (A. 1-4. 60) and hundreds on Attic bf. and rf. (A. 5-59. 61-87). H. uses spear or sword, later a club, and his opponent is usually running away or collapsing. Where named she is almost always Andromache, once Antimache (A. 19) and twice Kydoime (A. 63. 64); Hippolyte is elsewhere in the battle on A. 67*. For other Amazon names see list in LIMCI p. 653. On A. 12* the walls and gate of Themiskyra are shown. There are relief metopes with the subject at Delphi and Selinus (A. 95 = [Dodekathlos] 1703; A. 96).

In the 5th/4th cent. there are far fewer scenes involving other Greeks: Attic vases, A. 88 (against Hippolyte), 89*; throne of Zeus at Olympia, 98; Delphi metopes, 100*; Tarentum relief, 103*; and duels are commoner (Olympia metopes, 97. 99; bronzes, 105*. 107*. 108). In the Hellenistic period the duel is normal (clay and metal reliefs, 109. 110; stone relief, 115* = [Dodekathlos] 1712; A. 116).

On Roman sarcophagi H. may trample the prostrate Amazon taking her belt (LIMCI p. 595 types III. IV; Robert, types a. b; A. 128*-137*; [Dodekathlos] 1713-1719. 1721-1724. 1752 and 1720 where she lies on a collapsed horse); or he holds the small kneeling Amazon by her hair (LIMCI p. 595 type II, Robert, type c; A. 123*; [Dodekathlos] 1731). Other Roman examples of the former type (trampling) are: A. 116 (? = [Dodekathlos] 1746). A. 118 (also held by hair, and a horse beyond). 142 (= [Dodekathlos] 1736). 156* (= [Dodekathlos] 1728). 159* (with horse). 160* (with horse; hair not held). 161a* (with horse). 163*. 164 (= [Dodekathlos] 1761) and of the latter type (kneeling, held by hair) are 165* (? = [Dodekathlos] 1729). [Dodekathlos] 1713 (with horse). Other attacks on foot are: A. 140* (= [Dodekathlos] 1737; seized by hair, standing). 141. 146 (two dead Amazons). 149. 150* (Amazon kneels). 155* (Amazon collapses; other Greeks). Cf. A. 120* (three Amazons retreat).

B.C. - H., with lionskin, raises his club against an Amazon on her knees before him, seizing her hair. The adjacent slab (1010) may show Theseus with a mounted Amazon (Ashmole, o. c. 200 n. 88 and JHS 89, 1969, 22-23 pl. 1). The rest of the fights is of Amazons mounted and on foot, with Greeks.

2. Herakles attacks an Amazon or Amazons with or on horses

Paus. (5, 25, 11) saw a group by Aristokles at Olympia, apparently early 5th cent. B.C. since the dedicator was of Zankle (not «Messene»), but this would be far earlier than any other such scene with H. and is unlikely to have shown the removal of the belt, as Paus. also alleges. The motif appears certainly first about 400 B.C. following the pattern of the 5th cent. Theseus Amazonomachies, at Bassai and then in the Mausoleum (A. 101*. 102*), on South Italian vases (90*-93*), bronzes (106) and in the Hellenistic period at Magnesia (104*). It is far commoner in Roman art.

The motif of the Amazon dragged by her hair from her horse appears in earlier Amazonomachies (as A. 92c*) but H. is himself the attacker at Magnesia (A. 104f*) and often thereafter. There are several examples on sarcophagi (LIMCI p. 595 type I; Robert, types c. d; A. 122*. 124-127*; [Dodekathlos] 1730. 1732-1734). On other Roman works: A. 111* (= [Dodekathlos] 1741). 113 (= [Dodekathlos] 1740). 139 (= [Dodekathlos] 1735). 143 (= [Dodekathlos] 1748). 144 (with other fighting groups). 151. 152 (= [Dodekathlos] 1756). 158. 161*. 162*. 166 (held by helmet). 167*. [Dodekathlos] 1744 (?). The motif inspired the description in Q. Smyrn. 6, 240-245. Other attacks on a mounted Amazon: A. 119* (= [Dodekathlos] 1749). 121* (= [Dodekathlos] 1726). 145 (= [Dodekathlos] 1755). 147. 157 (= [Dodekathlos] 1760; Amazon prostrate on horse). And for an Amazon fallen from her horse or dismounted: A. 153 (= [Dodekathlos] 1727). 148 (= [Dodekathlos] 1754b).

2460. Marble relief on base fr. Tivoli, Hadrian Villa Mus. - 2nd cent. A.D. - H. with raised club drags an Amazon by her hair backwards off her collapsing horse.

3. Herakles and the Amazon's belt

On a Laconian cup of about 570 (= A. 2*; Pipili, LacLc 4-7 fig. 9) H. (?) is thought to be seizing a fleeing Amazon by her belt, and on an Attic vase of about 500 (= A. 70*; Boardman 7 n. 22) H. holds a belt (?) over a collapsing Amazon. Paus. (5, 25, 11) says that the early 5th cent. group at Olympia (see above, Section 2) showed the taking of the belt, but the Amazon was mounted and he is probably stating the stock theme rather than describing the group. This is certainly true of his description of the H. and Amazon group on the Temple of Zeus at Olympia (5, 10, 9). South Italian vases show the belt being handed over (A. 777-781; → Eros 913b; cf. Schauenburg), but on none of them is an Amazon named. The missing belt on the Berlin/Lansdowne/Sciara Amazon type, replaced by a broken rein, may refer (A. 603*; Boardman, J., AJA 84, 1980, 181-182; Harrison, E., in The Eye of Greece [Studies M. Robertson, 1982] 86). See also LIMCI pp. 649-650.

L. Herakles and Geryon (Labour X)

H. is required by Eurystheus to steal the cattle of → Geryoneus. He travels to the extremity of the known world in the far west, crosses Okeanos in the bowl of Helios to the island Erytheia, kills the herdsman → Eurytion (II), the two-headed dog Orthros and Geryon himself, and drives the herd to Tiryns. In time various parerga were grouped around this core of the story: → Antaios, → Bousiris, → Nereus, → Cacus, → Eryx, Pholos (→ Kentauroi).

LITERARY SOURCES: On the figure and home of Geryon see → Geryoneus.

The Labour is first mentioned in Hes. theog. 287-292, and already in this early source is undertaken at the behest of Eurystheus. The most important elements of the story - the setting on Erytheia in Okeanos, the fight with the dog, the herdsman and three-bodied warrior and driving off the cattle - appear already in this short account, which presupposes the existence of a fuller, even though oral, tradition of H.'s Labours in Eurystheus' service.

Of the later writers of epic Peisandros, who first assembled the complete Labours and made a decisive contribution to their canonic form, as later did Panyassis, must have dealt with the Geryon Labour in detail. Only one episode is preserved in Peisandros (Davies EGFF 6), where H. receives the bowl of Helios, to travel over Okeanos to Geryon's island, from Okeanos himself, while in Panyassis (Davies EGFF 7A) he receives it from Nereus.

Also in the early 6th cent. (cf. West, M. L., CIQ 65, 1971, 302-314) Stesichoros devoted the first whole poem to the Labour, probably the fullest literary treatment of the story (Page PMG frg. 181-186, SLG S 7-87; reconstructed in Page 138-154). It was recounted on epic scale and associated with a whole series of other H. adventures: wrestling → Nereus, who probably told H. the way to Erytheia (on this, Brize 1, 66-77; Davies, M., CIQ 82, 1988, 277-290); the encounter with → Helios in whose golden bowl he travelled (Page PMG frg. 185), his reception by the centaur Pholos on his journey home (PMG frg. 181). Stesich. first placed Geryon's island in the area of Tartessos, in south Spain (PMG frg. 184). In conversation with his mother Kallirrhoe and an unidentified man (Menoites?; see below, on Apollodoros) Geryon is presented as a noble hero (SLG S 9-13). He is armed as a hoplite, with corselet and helmet (SLG S 15), while H. is armed with lionskin, club and bow (PMG frg. 229). In contradiction to the heroic tradition H. attacks from ambush (SLG S 15) and kills one of Geryon's bodies with an arrow through the forehead, and the other two probably with his club (SLG S 15. 16). On Olympus Athena supports her protégé against Poseidon (SLG S 14).

Stesichoros' humane rendering of Geryon influences Pindar's reflexion on the story. Pindar, promoting the aristocratic ethic, justifies H.'s violence by his divine descent and sees at work in it a divine design for the world (frg. 169 Snell-Maehler). But he cannot deny sympathy and admiration for Geryon (frg. 81 Snell-Maehler).

The slight references do not permit a reconstruction of the treatment of the story in Attic drama. Only the titles and few fragments are preserved of Nikomachos of Alexandria's tragedy Geryones (TrGF I 27 F 3) and Ephippos' comedy of the same title (4th cent.; PCG V frg. 3-5). Aeschylus summarises the important elements of the myth in a few lines of the Heraclidae (TrGF III F 74). Other allusions testify to the popularity of the story in Classical Athens (Aischyl. Ag. 870; Eur. Herc. 423; Aristoph. Ach. 1082).

From the early 5th cent. Athenians could turn to prose, handbook summaries which sought to combine different versions of myths. Fragments of the mythographer Pherekydes have H. attacking Helios with his bow, and receiving from him the golden bowl. En route H. also attacked Okeanos for letting the waves run too high (FGrH 3 F 18a). He follows Stesich. in placing Erytheia at Gadeira (Cadiz) (F 18b), and this remains the standard version thereafter (Hdt. 4, 8;

Apollod. bibl. 2 [106] 5, 10; Paus. 1, 35, 8; contra He-kat., FGH 1 F 26).

The Labour was incorporated into stories of early Greek colonisation in the west, and served as aition for the foundation of cities and cults. Timaios of Tauromenion played a major role here, often cited by Diodorus Siculus. Diod. rationalises H.'s journey (4, 17-24) into a military expedition against the three mighty sons of Chrysaor, king of Iberia, who each commanded a great army and were beaten in succession by H. (4, 18, 2). The theft of the cattle remains the motive in this version. The outward journey through north Africa and the return through the lands of the Celts, Ligurians, Italians and Sicilians, were described in detail and associated with other adventures: An-taios, Bousiris, the erection of the columns at the Straits of Gibraltar (oldest sources: Pind. N. 3, 21; Hdt. 2, 33), Eryx, Lakinius, Kroton. At Agyrion in Sicily H. founded a cult for Geryon and Iolaos (Diod. 4, 24, 3-4).

The account in Apollodorus (bibl. 2 [106-112] 5, 10) is also influenced by Hellenistic historiography of the Greek west and includes the erection of the columns and exploits in Libya, Liguria and Sicily; but the author seems to follow older sources for the events on Erytheia (cf. Brize 1, 31-32): threatening Helios with the bow; camp on Mt. Abas; Menoites' warning to Geryon; H.'s attack with arrows.

There is no comprehensive account in Latin literature and the story is only mentioned as an accepted one of the canonic Labours (e.g., Lucr. 5, 28; Hyg. fab.
30, 11, who suggests that H. laid low the three-bodied Geryon with a single arrow). But, unlike the Greek tradition, Geryon commonly appears as an underworld demon in Italy (Verg. Aen. 6, 289; Hor. c. 2, 14, 7-9; → Geryoneus). The already rich local accounts of H.'s return through Italy in the Greek tradition gave Roman authors the opportunity to incorporate in it the local tale of → Cacus' theft of cattle, H.'s visit to Rome and his meeting with → Euandros, and so to integrate Greek myth into early Roman history (Liv. 1, 7, 3-15;
Verg. Aen. 8, 190-275; Prop. 4, 9, 1-20; Ov. fast. 1, 543-586; cf. Diod. 4, 21, 1-3; Dion. Hal. ant. 1, 39).

COMMENTARY

The theft of Geryon's cattle is one of the most commonly represented of H.'s Labours in ancient art. Some 130 scenes are known, of which over 70 are in Attic bf. Its popularity is only in part explained by the challenge it presented the artist to portray a three-bodied creature. Even the popular literary account by Stesichoros, which proved a recurrent source for details, served only as an inspiration for the representation of the story. More important was the affinity of Geryon with Hades, who also owned a vast herd and a multi-headed hound. The journey to Geryon was a journey to the other world, a courageous conquest of death rewarded by possession of the herd. Burkert (83–96) has remarked on the great antiquity of the cult acts inherent in the story. The theft and driving home the herd may have served as aitia for the meat-feasts enjoyed by associations of worshippers of H. in Athens, Thasos and elsewhere from the 6th cent. on. Local cult traditions in Cyprus and Sicily and association with many foundation stories of western colonies may explain the wider popularity outside the Greek homeland.

In accord with the Archaic principle of choosing the climax of a story for depiction most scenes show the fight between H. and Geryon. Only with the Late Archaic do scenes preceding (H. and Helios) or after (H. with cattle) the fight begin to appear.

1. Herakles fighting Geryon

The earliest extant scene appears in Corinth little after the first literary reference. While Hesiod's lines present a pregnant summary of a story which must have been more fully developed in the oral tradition, the Protocorinthian pyxis (2462) offers an experimental stage in the search for a satisfactory iconographic formula for the three-bodied monster (→ Geryoneus 11, with commentary). The cattle at the r. guarantee the identification since H. still lacks his characteristic attributes. He draws his bow at Geryon, as in the opening of the literary account.

The next phase, the close fight, appears first on the bronze plaque from Samos (2476) already in the scheme which would become familiar in the second half of the 6th cent. in Athens: H. seizes one of Geryon's helmet crests, pulls it towards him and drives his sword into the neck while another head falls back mortally wounded by an arrow. The two consecutive phases of the fight are combined in a way which sets the pattern for future scenes. Since the new scheme appears in Corinthian scenes of the first half of the 6th cent. (2477, 2478, 2498) we must, in the light of our lacunose evidence, reckon with the probability that Corinth originated the scheme. The general character of the whole narrative, however, is Ionian. It is the first to introduce Eurytion and the hound Orthros, as well as the characterisation of the protagonists: Geryon with two legs only (→ Geryoneus 15, 16*, with commentary) and H. in lionskin. The lionskin is probably first shown on a Late Protocorinthian alabasteron (Brize 1 pl. 1, 1) but is exceptional in most representations of the Greek mainland until the 2nd quarter of the 6th cent., while in the few Ionian scenes with H. of the latest 7th and early 6th cent. (57*, 1690*; see Final Commentary, below) the skin also covers the hero's body while its head hangs to one side. On the Samian plaque H. for the first time wears the head as a helmet, a highly influential motif. The suggestion that the scheme was first devised in the east (cf. Kunze, Schildbänder 95 n. 1) – probably after eastern models (cf. Madhloom, T. A., The Chronology of Neo-Assyrian Art [1970] 80 pl. 53, 1, 2) – seems supported by the Samian find.

The Ionian artist characterised H. as a violent fellow not only by the lionskin but by defining his features, with the gross lips and nose and long beard, setting him off from his opponents, Eurytion and Geryon. The new physiognomy and dress represents a new conception of the hero in art – a change expressed also in the first full literary treatment of the story, by Stesichoros (on the chronological relation with Stesichoros see Brize 2, 86–89).

The popularity of the story in Corinth is shown by the way it repeatedly appears beside other myths and especially other deeds of H.: the Middle Corinthian cup fr. (2498), shieldbands (2477, 2478), the Chest of Kypselos (2505). All keep to the iconographic formula established in the Samos bronze (2476), with the third head of Geryon falling back, but, unlike the Ionian figures, the Corinthian Geryon has six legs (as Paus. attests also for the Chest of Kypselos). The Corinthian formula is observed throughout Attic art. In Corinth we miss Eurytion and Orthros, certainly through the restrictions of the size of the available field. Only from the mid-6th cent. does H. wear the lionskin in the manner first shown on the Samian plaque.

Attic painters take the six-leg scheme for Geryon from Corinth and, from the start, give H. a lionskin. On the earliest scene, the hydria by Lydos (2463), H. has the skin slung round his hips with the head hanging, a scheme seldom seen later (e.g. Swing P., ABV 308, 71); the E Group painters first show him wearing the lion head in the canonical manner. Lydos also takes an intermediate position in the iconography of the myth, choosing the distant fight despite the narrow field at his disposal. Since the distant fight required more room it is later reserved for friezes (2464, 2473) or either side of the same vase (2466, 2467, 2469). Lydos follows Corinth with one Geryon head struck by an arrow and falling back, and obviously understands the motif since the arrow is clearly lodged in the eye.

In the mid century the E Group painters devise four related iconographic types to deal with the problem of the restricted field of belly amphorae, types which remain current through the century and are often imitated (2480–2491). It is the close fight, with H.'s l. arm behind Geryon's shield, probably to pull closer the nearest body, while his r. hand holds club or sword aloft, or lowered, ready to strike. One of the earliest and finest of this group is the amphora signed by Exekias as potter (2486), important for the carefully inscribed names, unique on Attic bf. vases of this series, and in details which, as on the Samian bronze (2476), reflect the earlier phase of the fight. Two of Geryon's heads and Eurytion, on the ground between the contestants, have been struck by arrows; H. does not carry his bow but does wear his quiver at his back. The movement of the three-bodied figure corresponds with the plight of each body: the front one sinks forward, almost completely hidden by the shield; the rear one turns the upper body and loses touch with his brothers. The scheme is repeated on a whole series of Attic bf. vases (e.g. 2480, 2487, 2489, 2493, 2494) though not always with the details of wounding diagnostic for the type. H.'s quiver is often omitted and the complicated anatomy of Geryon may be misunderstood. The clear design is often spoilt by false incisions at neck or shoulder outline (2480, 2484, 2493) or crossed helmet crests (2480, 2484). There is a liking for variety of choice in attendant figures, in dress and weapons: Orthros beside Eurytion (2480, 2484, 2493); gods (Athena: 2487, 2492, 2493; Hermes: 2494; Athena and Hermes: 2490); a fleeing youth with a club (2487, 2491, 2492, 2494) who is presumably either a second herdsman, not recorded in the texts, or Menoites (cf. Apollod. bibl. 2 [108] 5, 10). These variations in the repertoire are a feature of the vase-painter's art, as we can judge from the series by a single painter (Clement 4–5).

About 530 the E Group promotes new types. The fragment 2465 shows H. again with his bow and, at the r. break, a hand with a spear held upright over Eurytion's head can only be Geryon's. This is unlike all other schemes and is a complete innovation. Other artists attempting to fit so many figures and bodies into a narrow field create complicated, overlapping compositions. Earliest of this type is the Lydos plate fr. (2499). The tendency continues especially in Late Archaic (2488, 2495) when artists are inclined to include as many attendant figures as possible.

Non-Attic scenes appear about the same time as the first Attic. The two Chalcidian (2464, 2479) are distinguished from the Attic and Corinthian by the form of Geryon, with only two legs, and are in the Ionian tradition (see above, on 2476). Geryon's great wings are exceptional, not seen again in art (cf. Commentary on → Geryoneus 15, 16*) – a painterly detail, used also in Stesichoros' Geryoneis, to demonstrate the fabulous character of the monster. The earlier scene (2479) shows the close fight in the conventional scheme, with H. in corselet without lionskin; the later (2464) is one of the most explicit and individual. H. stoops slightly to stalk his opponent, already struck by an arrow, without diminishing the force of his attack. Eurytion has been struck to the ground by an arrow in his back, face down, twisting in his death throes. Orthros lies dead on his back, bleeding from a gaping wound in his belly (as 2499, 2501, 2506). The scene is closed by Athena and the herd, realistically portrayed, hitherto seen so graphically only on the Samos plaque (2476). The chariot on the back of the vase carries a frontal, helmeted charioteer (Iolaos?), the only figure not named, and is not a traditional element in this composition. Local tradition, Ionian example and perhaps knowledge of the Geryoneis of Stesichoros, a resident of the Chalcidian colonies, may have contributed to the scene.

Knowledge of the story may have reached Etruria at this time via the Chalcidian colonies in the west. A bf. crater (→ Geryoneus 19 = Herakles/Hercle 245) has the herd beside the fight and in the same frieze a centaur with kantharos (cf. Brize 1 pl. 9, 2) – Pholos? The visit to Pholos was part of Stesichoros' Geryoneis (Page PMG fig. 181). When the Greek story was adopted the identification of Greek Geryon with an Italian deity, originally not associated with H., must have played an important role (see Commentary to → Geryoneus 5*, 7*, 25*).

In Attica of the last quarter of the 6th cent. there is a tendency to include more figures. The woman who appears calm (2489, 2495) or with a gesture of horror (2470, 2501) behind Geryon, who flees terrified (2473, 2485) and once runs between the contestants (2488), is never named, even on Euphronios' cup (2501) where all other figures are inscribed. Nevertheless the implicit narrative of the finer rf. scenes (2473, 2501) demands an identification. One suggestion has been that she is the local nymph Erytheia, who is variously described in sources as a Hesperid (Apollod. bibl. 2 [114] 5, 11; Hes. fig. 360 Merkelbach/West), as mother of Eurytion (Hellan., FGH 4 F 110) or as daughter of Geryon (Paus. 10, 17, 5). Attendant local nymphs do not certainly appear before the 5th cent., while mourning mothers of heroes are an iconographic feature of Archaic art, so we should see here Kallirrhoe, mother of Geryon (Robertson 215; Brize 1, 61–2). In Stesich. (Page SLG S 12, 13)

Kallirrhoe seeks to dissuade her son from the confrontation, just before the fight.

In one scene a woman with kerykeion (2473) approaches the fight and turns to Athena who seems to greet her with outstretched l. hand. Though she is wingless this must be Iris (Robertson 214; Brize 1, 62). She is not mentioned in the extant lines of Stesichoros but an occasion for her dispatch may have been the discussion between Poseidon and Athena (Page SLG S 14). This and other details suggest that the attempt of the early rf. scenes to give the fullest account of the story must relate closely to the inspiration of literary sources. The arrows in Geryon's eye or head appear, as they did on the Samos plaque (2476), the Lydos hydria (2463), the amphora signed by Exekias (2486). On Euphronios' cup Orthros lies dead, shot in the belly, as on the Chalcidian amphora (2464) and Lydos plate (2499). The lively rendering of the herd also distinguishes several of these scenes (2476, 2464, 2501). It is no coincidence that other episodes of the story begin to appear at this time – H. and Helios (2545) and H. in the bowl (2550) – see below.

There is no more detailed and exact scene than Euphronios' (2501). The artist uses both sides of the cup to create one long frieze, allowing the presence of the protagonists, Athena, Kallirrhoe, the herd, as well as Iolaos and other armed companions of H. who are driving the cattle even before the fight is over. Only Diod. (4, 17–24) mentions companions, making the Labour a military expedition. Euphronios also breaks with tradition in the composition: H. holds bow and two arrows in his l. hand, and raises his club in his r. for the coup de grâce. This is the first plausible coordination of the two weapons that characterise the fight.

A late bf. lekythos reflects another element in the literary tradition (2472): H. kneels behind a rock in ambush and draws his bow at Geryon. There are good grounds for detecting the ambush motif in Stesich. (Page SLG S 15 col. 18: λάθραι πολεμῆσιν; cf. Page 154). But the standing Eurytion and the normal dog facing up to H. do not correspond. Moreover, the direction of action is changed, r. to l., and the stricken body of Geryon falls forward, not back.

The Attic series ends with the Kleophrades P.'s cycle (2502). H. runs past Eurytion, shot in the belly, and attacks Geryon with his club. H. is naked but for his lionskin, wrapped round his outstretched l. arm.

The Cyprus relief (2512) probably decorated the base of a colossal statue of H. (cf. Myres, J. L., Handbook of the Cesnola Coll. [1914] no. 1360). Other statuettes of Geryon alone, some also from Golgoi (→ Geryoneus 2*–4*) attest knowledge of the story in Cyprus from the end of the 7th cent., probably associated with a cult of H. While the representation of H. may derive from Greek models such as 2501, the two-register composition, the satyr-like features of Eurytion (→ Eurytion II 49*) and the dog's three heads, perhaps influenced by Kerberos, find no parallel in Greek art. The herd occupies an unusually large area.

The Labour first appears in architectural sculpture in a H. cycle on the Athenian treasury at Delphi (2506), but marked out by having all six western metopes devoted to it. At least three metopes were occupied by the cattle while the main fight occupies two: one with H. over dead Orthros, probably as on 2501; the other filled with Geryon whose three bodies are carved in different planes in a distinctive composition of movement. A hole below the r. shoulder of the body in the near plane, falling back, attests one of H.'s arrows. The herd is relatively spaciouly accommodated in the three metopes in contrast with the crowded fighting scenes of the east metopes. The Geryon adventure was H.'s «western Labour» par excellence, deliberately answering his eastern Amazonomachy (Gauer, W., in Forschungen und Funde, Festschr. B. Neutsch [1980] 127–136) but there were certainly other reasons for its exceptional role here. G. Lippold (JdI 67, 1952, 88–89) suggested a political allusion to Chalcis and Athens' victory in 506. With the Geryon labour aitiologically related to so many western foundation stories and with Delphi's role in colonial foundations, the choice of this theme for a building at Delphi was highly suitable. Moreover, scenes of H. with cattle were popular at this time (2533–2535), perhaps a reflection of the growing popularity of H. cults which were characterised by meat-feasts.

On the Olympia metopes the Labour, as the others, occupies just one metope (2507). The designer succeeded in creating a new composition for the three collapsing bodies. H. raises high his club to strike and steps on his opponent's knee, a new motif that expresses for the first time the effort and strain of the hero who usually defeats his opponents so easily. On the Hephaisteion the scene again occupies two metopes (2475) and offers room for the distant fight with the bow. For the first time both are naked, hereafter regular for H. (cf. 2474. 2503. 2504. 2508. 2509. 2511) but exceptional for Geryon in Greek art (cf. 2511).

The story seldom appears in Greek art after the mid-5th cent. After 2475 there is no example in architectural sculpture except for 2511, and 2502 is the last known rf. version. In cycles (2508) and on the solitary Greek coin (2509) the types derive from the conventional Late Archaic. The many variations in Hellenistic art (2474. 2510) may derive from lost works of major art, perhaps painting. This is especially true of the wholly new schemes on South Italian vases (2503. 2504) which seem especially to introduce local and Etrusco-Italic elements in Geryon's iconography (see → Geryoneus 17*. 18).

In Roman art, except for 2530, the story appears exclusively in cycles, especially on sarcophagi and in mosaics (→ Geryoneus 21*–24). In the early empire there seem to be several different conceptions, deriving from different traditions. The «classic» Greek type is attested throughout the empire, with H. naked but for the lionskin, club raised, fighting a three-bodied, armoured opponent of the same size (2513. 2515–2518. 2521–2522); among these the silver cup from Pompeii is a prime example for its quality (2521). This especially shows the bow in H.'s outstretched l. hand, a detail whose narrative significance would not have been lost on the informed viewer. By contrast, most Roman scenes show the opponent reduced in size to a mere comic cypher (2527–2531). This feature stresses the decorative function of many monuments (e.g. 2528). In the Italic tradition Geryon (→ Geryoneus 5*. 6*. 17*. 25*) has only one body with three heads (2528. 2531), a variant also in scenes where the sizes are the same (2519. 2526).

On a group of Roman sarcophagi of the second half of the 2nd cent. A.D. (2523–2525) the fight occupies the r. corner so that Geryon's body sometimes overlaps onto the short side. The three examples differ from each other in composition and the form of Geryon and on one (2524) the movement of the bodies is so diverse that it seems to defy any plausible anatomical unity. Of all the Roman examples this group represents a total break with the iconographical tradition and other solutions. This is true also for some mosaics (→ Geryoneus 22*. 24) where the fighting group is dispersed and the death of Geryon represented in totally new compositions.

2. Herakles and the cattle of Geryon

Representations of H. alone with the cattle are far fewer than the fight but they establish, from the late Archaic period on (2533–2534), a second type for the Labour which can complement the fight in cycles (2525a) or replace it (2533. 2536. 2537. 2541). That the essential association with the fight with Geryon is still observed in the Roman period is shown by the coin 2538, where Eurytion lies dead among the cattle. Where H. is with only one bull there may be doubt about whether Geryon's herd is intended (2542–2544).

There must have been a basic connection between the first examples of this scheme and those in which the herd is associated with the fight, perhaps through the growing popularity and specific character of H. cult (see above on 2506). At about the same time there are vase scenes with H. resting between cows and their suckling calves in a rocky setting (2535). The bucolic trait may relate to H.'s role as protector of herdsmen and herds (cf. Anth. Pal. 9, 72. 316; Dion Chrys. 1, 61 R). A small Hellenistic votive relief (2535c) is related, where the cattle, set in pairs and on several registers, surround the naked hero. So it is no coincidence that on the Attic victor's relief (2508 = 2535b), probably from a H. sanctuary, the scene with the cattle complements, though in a separate field, the fight with Geryon.

On a Roman sarcophagus (2536a) where the otherworldly events are combined in a telling composition which symbolizes the hero's triumph over the powers of death, two bulls substitute for the Geryon episode though the figure of H. is not immediately associated with them. The realistic rendering of the bulls and the Hesperides tree rather evoke an association with the richness and plenty which the hero might enjoy when he has achieved immortality and which represent a promise of the other world for mortal believers.

In the Augustan period H. with the cattle carries a supplementary narrative meaning (since the return through Italy is integrated into the early history of Rome. A gem (2536) illustrates an episode of the encounter with Cacus, related several times in contemporary Roman poetry: H. drives his herd from Cacus' cave, located on the slopes of the Palatine (see above, Lit. Sources). It is uncertain whether the incised frieze on a Campanian bronze dinos (→ Cacus 5 = Herakles/Hercl 276) is also to be associated with the story. At any rate these scenes demonstrate the popularity of the story of H.'s return from Erytheia through Italy, a story which provided the aition for several city and cult foundations in the western Mediterranean.

3. Herakles and Helios

Representations of H.'s encounter with Helios and his voyage in the golden bowl over Okeanos must be included here because the great majority of literary sources explicitly associate the episode with the Geryon Labour (Stesich., Page PMG fig. 185; Aischyl. Herakleidae, TrGF III F 74; Pherekyd., FGrH 3 F 18a; Panyassis, Davies EGFF 7A; Apollod. bibl. 2 [107] 5, 10). Only in a second phase it seems to have been transferred by Pherekyd. (FGrH 3 F 16. 17; whence Apollod. bibl. 2 [113] 5, 11; cf. Brize 1, 78–80) to the journey to the Hesperides where already in Mimnermos (West IEG fig. 12) the starting point for Helios' nightly journey had been located.

Although the episode exemplifies the hero's intrepidity and lends a special character to his journey to the other world, it was represented relatively late and seldom. The eight extant vase scenes are all of the short period c. 510–450 B.C. The lekythos 2548 most probably alludes to literary accounts of H. threatening Helios with his bow (Pherekyd., FGrH 3 F 18a). H. strides towards Helios, club lowered, bow in his outstretched hand, with loose string. It is not then an exact illustration of Pherekydes' story. The presence of Athena at the right reminds us that this unprecedented deed also called for divine support (cf. Stesich., Page SLG S 14). The lekythos 2549 records the same attack on Helios but the bow is missing. Two other scenes (2545. 2546) show the meeting of god and hero on the shores of Okeanos. 2545 and A of 2546 show the same scene in virtually the same manner: Helios' chariot plunges into Okeanos and the god turns his head to H. who crouches on the shore and raises his r. hand as if to speak. Since his l. hand holds his club (and clearly raised on 2545) his words could be threatening too. Side B on 2546 repeats the chariot of Helios but H. turns away from it and climbs the steep cliff, looking back at him.

The Theseus P. seems to have shown two successive moments of the same event on the front and back of the same vase. The observation that the shore on side B is steeper than that on side A leads to the conclusion that it is not the same shore. We can surmise that on A H. is asking Helios' help to cross Okeanos and on B, as a consequence, he is landing on Erytheia, where he spent the night on Mount Abas according to Apollod. bibl. 2 (108) 5, 10. This mountain may also appear on the lekythos 2547: H. is sacrificing at an altar on high ground, perhaps a mountain top. Helios' chariot rises from Okeanos, while Eos and Nyx disappear. H.'s sacrifice is surely to Helios, who was commonly worshipped at sunrise on mountain tops, out of gratitude for his help (cf. Brize 1, 63).

It is most striking that Helios' chariot is never on these vases shown in the mythical bowl, although in this context it might be expected, and it is the case in other scenes where H. is missing (cf. the lekythos Boston, MFA 93.99, ABL 120, 4 pl. 23, 1; the amphora Vienna 815, ibid. 120, 5; Schauenburg, K., Helios [1955] fig. 22). In these scenes the shape of the legendary vehicle differs from the vessels (lebes, dinos) with clearly offset rim, in which H. travels on vases 2550–2552.

Each of these three scenes carries a distinctive statement of the theme. In the earlier two (2550. 2551) the dangers of the journey seem to be emphasized since the hero can hardly be accommodated in the relatively small vase and on 2550 his legs hang over the edge of the cramped vessel, dancing on the waves. In the small rf. tondo of 2551 the nakedness of the hero (without even the lionskin) crouching anxiously in the vessel accentuates his unprotected resource against the force of the elements, the bow in his hands his only weapon. Quite different is the later scene in the superb tondo 2552. Here H. is covered up to his chest in the massive vessel, designed not for him but for Helios with his chariot. The hero crosses Okeanos the more secure, gazing towards his goal, the great club on his shoulder, confident in his strength and in divine protection.

The vase scenes thus agree well with the literary tradition about the means of H.'s journey to the island of Geryon, though it must be remarked that the scenes themselves offer no explicit reference to the purpose of the journey. In the Late Archaic period this episode, like that of H. with the herd, probably acquired an independent status, based on the one hand on H.'s rash challenge to a god, on the other on his journey to the other world.

M. Herakles and Kerberos (Labour XI)

H. has to bring Kerberos, guard dog of the Underworld, alive to Eurystheus.

LITERARY SOURCES: This labour is already known to Homer: H. is sent by Eurystheus to the Underworld to bring back the hound of Hades and requires Athena's help to escape the waters of the Styx (Il. 8, 362–369). Od. 11, 623–626 stresses the difficulty of the labour, adding that H. was escorted by Hermes and Athena when he brought the dog up from Hades. → Kerberos is called only the «dog of Hades», being first named and described, as fifty-headed, in

Hes. theog. 310-312 in a passage unconnected with H. Athena's intervention in the labour is not mentioned elsewhere; Hermes' presence is noted by Apollod. bibl. 2 (123) 5, 12 (cf. Pediasimos 12) only when H. meets the ghost of Medusa (→ Gorgo, Gorgones) on his way to find Kerberos. Homer gives no other information about the capture of Kerberos (Il. 5, 395-397 tells how H. wounded Hades at Pylos; cf. Panyassis, Davies EGF F 6). The Schol. Hom. Il. 5, 395-397 Erbse combines the wounding of Hades with the capture of Kerberos in an otherwise unknown version where H. subdues the beast by using stones as missiles, and when opposed by Pluto, shoots the god with his bow.

Most of the surviving fragments of 6th and early 5th cent. B.C. works which mention H. and/or Kerberos either deal with H.'s other encounters in the Underworld (the ghost of → Meleagros; Pind frag. 249a Snell/Machler; Bakchyl. 5, 56-175; → Theseus and → Peirithoos; Panyassis, Davies EGF F 9. Cf. Euphorion frag. 51 Powell and Apollod. bibl. 2 [124-125] 5, 12 where H. rolls the stone off Askalaphos and, according to Apollod., wrestles with → Menoites after killing one of the cattle of Hades) or are too short to reveal the content of the poem (title Kerberos by Stesich., Page PMG frag. 206; «Kerberos ... hundred-headed», Pind. dith. 2 frag. 249b Snell/Machler). The fragment of a lyric poem attributed to Pindar (frag. 346 Snell/Machler; Lloyd-Jones, H., Maia NS 3, 19, 1967, 206-229) may have included, in an account of H.'s katabasis, his initiation by → Eumolpos at Eleusis.

Euripides gives the first coherent account: H. descends through the chasm at Tainaron (Herc. 23-24. A cave at Tainaron was identified; see Pearson, A. C., The Fragments of Sophocles [1917] I, 167-168; other adherents to the claim of Tainaron: Sen. Herc. f. 663-664; Apollod. l.c.; cf. the rationalization by Hekataios [FCrH 1 F 27] who said Kerberos was a poisonous snake, living on Tainaron, which H. brought to Eurystheus. A claim was also made for the Acherusian Chersonese as the place of H.'s descent: Xen. an. 6, 2, 2). Eur. Herc. 610-619 specifies that H. subdued Kerberos (three-headed, as in Soph. Trach. 1098 and most later writers, but triple-bodied in Eur. Herc. 24) with a struggle; that he was not given Kerberos by Persephone, but that he was fortunate to have seen the rites of the initiates. The connection between H.'s initiation and the capture of Kerberos is made, with variations, by Aristoph. Ranae 465-469, where H. throttles Kerberos (cf. Apollod. bibl. 2 [216] 5, 12), drives the monster out of Hades, and is then (as Dionysos/H.) promised a warm reception from Persephone (Ranae 503-518; see Lloyd-Jones, o.c. 218-221); by Diod. 4, 25, 1 and 26, 1, where in order to succeed in this labour, H. goes to Athens for initiation by Mousaios, is then welcomed like a brother by Persephone in Hades and given Kerberos enchained; by Apollod. l.c., where H., having been initiated by Eumolpos at Eleusis, asks Pluto for Kerberos, and is ordered to take the hound without using weapons (cf. Schol. Hom. Il. 5, 395-397 Erbse; Tzetz. chil. 2, 389-405; Pediasimos l.c.), which he does by gripping Kerberos in a stranglehold, although bitten by the beast's snake-headed tail (cf. Kall. frag. 515 Pf.).

In Eur. Herc. 619, H. delays his departure from Hades in order to rescue Theseus (cf. Eur. Peirithous, TGF<sup>2</sup> p. 546-547; cf. Page, D. L., Greek Literary Papyri: Poetry [1942] 120-125; Kritias Peirithous, TrGF 1 43 F 1; Sen. Herc. f. 806; Apollod. l.c.; Tzetz. l.c.; Diod. 4, 26, 1 says that by favour of Persephone, Peirithoos was also rescued; Myth. Vat. I 57 gives the purpose of H.'s descent as the rescue of Theseus, whose safety H. ensured by removing Kerberos; see below, section XI) In Eur. Herc. 615, H. leaves Kerberos at Demeter's grove in Hermione (cf. Paus. 2, 35, 10: behind the sanctuary of Chthonia there was a chasm whence H. was said to have led Kerberos up from Hades) before seeing Eurystheus and later asks Theseus to help him take Kerberos to Argos (Eur. Herc. 1386-1387). Others claim that H. brought Kerberos up at Troezen (Apollod. l.c.; Paus. 2, 31, 2) or on Mt. Laphystios in Boiotia (Paus. 9, 34, 5). Diod. 4, 26, 1 says only that H. exhibited Kerberos to men; Apollod. l.c. asserts that after H. showed Kerberos to Eurystheus, he returned the monster to Hades (cf. Tzetz. l.c.).

Some later authors emphasize the ferocity of Kerberos, and H.'s struggle to overcome and lead away the monster. Euphorion (frag. 51 Powell) tells how Kerberos terrified women and children with his flashing eyes when H. led the beast into the world. In Ov. met. 7, 408-415, Kerberos is dragged up in chains, fighting and turning away from the light (cf. Sen. Ag. 859-862; Herc. f. 813-827); from the drops of Kerberos' saliva grew the plant Aconitum, by which Theseus was later poisoned (see Robert, Heldensage<sup>4</sup> 487). The fight with Kerberos (a savage, baying monster, mane bristling with vipers and snake-tail hissing) is violent in Sen. Herc. f. 782-827: using his lionskin as a shield (cf. Apollod. l.c.; Schol. Hom. Il. 5, 395-397), H. beats Kerberos into submission with his club (cf. Q. Smyrn. 6, 265-268), and leads the tamed beast away, with the consent, given in fear, of Pluto and Proserpina. In a muddled passage by Nonnus Abbas (Westermann, A., Mythographi Graeci [1843] 375 no. 38), H. kills Kerberos when he goes with Peirithoos (rather than Theseus) to seize Persephone. According to Myth. Vat. I 92; II 154 H. rescues → Alcestis when he goes to Hades for Kerberos.

GREEK

In archaic representations, H. is usually fully dressed; in later art, he is usually naked, holding his club, sometimes carrying his lionskin. In Attic vase painting, Kerberos usually has two canine heads (one head: 2570. 2576), a mane down his necks and back, and a snake-headed tail; in other art, archaic and later, he usually has three heads (one head: 2553. 2591. 2621; two heads: 2579). See → Kerberos.

1. The capture of Kerberos

a) Herakles threatens Hades: Kerberos runs away Corinthian Vase

2553. (= Athena 11*, = Hades 136, = Hermes 511) Kotyle. Lost. From Argos. - Amyx, CVP 185, 2: Pholoe P.; Payne, NC 127, fig. 45c; Brommer, H. pl. 24b. - About 590-580 B.C. - H. (naked, quiver on back, bow in r. hand) striding l., raising a stone (?) at Hades, who flees l.; confronting H., goddess (identified as Athena by Payne, o.c. 130; Beckel 43; Boardman 7, Demargne, → Athena 11; as Persephone by Schefold, SBII 120; Schmidt, M., in Festschr. F. Brommer [1977] 271-272) standing in front of throne; following H., Hermes; on r. Kerberos (one head, snakes rising from body and head) fleeing r.; on far r. a column.

b) Herakles confronts Kerberos Attic Vases

The usual scheme has H. standing on the l. facing the palace of Hades represented by a column or portico on the r. Kerberos stands (or sits) in or in front of the portico facing H. On the far r., Persephone (absent on 2554 and 2559) stands in the portico looking l. Hades is present on 2558-2559. 2561. 2567. Athena and Hermes are variables. On 2554-2555 and 2560 H. crouches in front of Kerberos; elsewhere he stands or takes a step forward.

sen pls. 90. XXXI. - About 525-510 B.C. - H. crouching with chain lowered in l. hand, reaching out with r. to stroke Kerberos who emerges from portico; on l., Athena; between H. and Kerberos a tree and H.'s club resting at angle. For H. and Athena without Persephone, cf. Munich, Antikenslg. 1615B (J, 1206); Athena beside Kerberos.

2555. (= Hermes 512) Amphora, bf. Moscow, Hist. Mus. 70. From Tarquinia. - ABV 255, 8: Lysippides P.; Boardman pl. 2a; idem, ABFH pl. 163; Marwitz, H., Oefh 46, 1963, 88 fig. 47. - About 525-510 B.C. - H. and Kerberos similar to 2554; in portico, Persephone walking l., both arms outstretched over Kerberos; on l., Hermes bending over H.

2556.* Hydria, bf. Boston, MFA 28.46. - ABV 261, 38: manner of Lysippides P.; CVA 2 pl. 79; Boardman pl. 2b. - About 520-510 B.C. - H. standing; Kerberos outside portico, sniffing H.'s hand; beside Kerberos, Hermes walking r., looking back; on r., Persephone; on l., Athena. Cf. Naples, Mus. Naz. SA 267; Para 138, 4; CVA 1 pl. 4, 3; Persephone absent. Naples, Mus. Naz. 81102 (H 3378); ABV 477, 9; CVA 1 pl. 34, 3.

2557.* Neck-amphora, bf. Starnberg, Purrmann. - Para 141, 5: Medea Group; Boardman pl. 4a; Felten fig. 5. - About 520-510 B.C. - Similar to 2556; Kerberos and Persephone sitting. Hermes holds kerykeion, not Kerberos (as Schauenburg, Jdl 76, 1961, 62). For Kerberos sitting, cf. Berlin (West), Staatl. Mus. F 1880; CVA 5 pl. 44, 3 and 4.

2558. (= Hades 138, = Hermes 514) Neck-amphora, bf. St. Louis, Washington Univ. 39:1921 (WV 3274) (668). From Orbetello. - ABV 328, 7: Long Nose P.; Mylonas, G., AJA 44, 1940, 196-199 figs. 8. 9. - About 520-510 B.C. - H. on l. behind Hermes, who quiets submissive Kerberos; beside Kerberos, Hades walking r., looking back; on r., Persephone. No palace.

2561. (= Hades 137*) Amphora, bf. Vatican 372. From Cervetri. - ABV 368, 107: Leagros Group; Boardman pl. 2c; Felten fig. 4; Schefold, SBII fig. 153. - About 520-510 B.C. - H. with club (no chain) lowered in r. hand, making a restraining gesture with l., either at Kerberos or at Hades, who stands beside Kerberos, making a similar gesture at Persephone, seated in portico; on l., Athena.

2562.* Pelike, bf. Boulogne, Mus. 412. - ABV 376, 220: Leagros Group, Antiope Group I; v. Bothmer, D., JHS 71, 1951, 42 no. 2 pl. 21b. - About 510-500 B.C. - Damaged. H., club on shoulder, chain lowered in r. hand, looking across Kerberos at Persephone (in portico beside Kerberos with her arm outstretched over his heads); beside Kerberos, large snake emerging from palace; on l., Athena seated. For snake, cf. 2563. 2565.

2563. Neck-amphora frs., bf. Leipzig, Univ. T 4485. - CVA 2 pl. 13, 1. 2: Leagros Group. - About 500 B.C. - H. with chain lowered, no club; Hermes beside Kerberos in portico with Persephone; large snake as on 2562. 2565. Cf. Paris, Louvre F 241; ABV 383, 5; CVA 5, pl. 47, 6; Persephone absent.

2565. Hydria, bf. Capesthorpe, Bromley-Davenport. - ARV<sup>2</sup> 232, 2: Eucharides P.; Charlton, J. M. T., JHS 78, 1958, 20 pl. 9. - About 500-480 B.C. - H. holding chain in both hands; Hermes between H. and Kerberos, looking at H., and gesturing towards Persephone; large snake as on 2562 and 2563. A near mirror image, without the snake, is on a lost bf. neck-amphora, once in Naples (Gargiulo, R., Coll. Nat. Mus. [1872] IV pl. 30): H. approaches from r.; Persephone stands on l.

2566. Neck-amphora, bf. Market 1937. - Vente Charpentier (4 juin 1937) pl. 10 no. 33. - Late 6th cent. B.C. - H., club on r. shoulder, l. arm outstretched, striding towards Kerberos, who stands in portico, raising paw in resistance; beside Kerberos, Persephone running r., looking back at H.; on l., Hermes.

2567. Amphora fr., bf. Malibu, Getty Mus. 86.AE.87.1-3. - GettyVases 2 (1985) 202 fig. 22; CVA 1 pl. 39, 1. - Late 6th cent. B.C. - H. lost; beside column, hindquarters of Kerberos; on l. of column, shoulder and raised hand of Hermes (cf. 2565); on r. of column, Hades facing l., holding staff in l. hand, and a stone (?) raised in r.

2568.* Oinochoe, bf. Hamburg, Mus. KG 1899.98. From Boeotia. - ABV 528, 33: Athena P. or workshop, IV; CVA 1 pl. 28, 5. 6. - Early 5th cent. B.C. - H. with chain in both hands about to slip it under Kerberos' head; Hermes beside Kerberos (foreparts only). Branches in field. Cf. bf. cup frs.; Basel, H. Cahn HC 804.808; Hermes (three fingers and slanting staff) probably on l., as on 2555.

Gem

2569.* Rock crystal scarab, East Greek. London, M. Hay Coll. - About 500 B.C. - H., with sword (?) raised in r. hand, approaching Kerberos (three heads, canine) from l., apparently holding him with l. hand.

c) Herakles and Kerberos confronted by Hades (?)

Attic Vase

d) Herakles and Kerberos pulling in opposite directions

Apulian rf. vases

H. and Kerberos are part of a larger Underworld scene presided over by Hades and Persephone (cf. 2620).

2571.* (= Danaides 8, = Erinys 11, = Hades 130) Volute-krater. Karlsruhe, Bad. Landesmus. B 4. - RVAp I 431, 81 pl. 160, 1: Follower of Lycurgus P.; Trendall, RFSIS fig. 151; CVA 2 pls. 62-63, 64, 1-3. - 350-325 B.C. - In lower zone, young H. (naked, bow on shoulder) looking r., brandishing club in r. hand, trying to pull Kerberos (three-headed, with snake-headed tail attacking H.'s leg), who pulls r., around to l.; on l., Hermes; on r., Erinys; below, the river Styx. Above on r., beside palace of Hades and Persephone, two youths, probably Theseus and Peirithoos. Cf. Naples, Mus. Naz. 80854 (SA 11) (= Erinys 9*, = Hades 135); RVAp I 424, 54; Schauenburg, K., JdI 73, 1958, 66 fig. 11; Vollkommer 16 fig. 22. (only l. arm preserved) leading Kerberos (single leonine head, open-mouthed snake over back) to r. Identification, suggested by Dunbabin, taken as certain by Schäfer.

2623. (= 1341 with bibl., = 2547, = Astra 3*, = Helios 105* with bibl.) Lekythos, Attic bf. New York, MMA 41.162.29. - Haspels, ABL 120-124, 226, 6 pl. 32, 1; Sappho P.; Pinney, G. F./Ridgway, B. S., JHS 101, 1981, 141-144, pl. 3. - Early 5th cent. B.C. - H. sacrificing at altar; below, in cave, a dog (?) looking up, snarling. Pinney/Ridgway suggest that the animal is Kerberos and that H. is sacrificing prior to undertaking the Labour. Cf. 2553, 2570, 2576, 2591, 2621 for single-headed Kerberos.

2624. (= 1891* with bibl.) Bell-krater, Attic rf. Utrecht, Univ. vH 18. From Naples. - ARV 1053, 42: Polygnotos Group. - Beazley and Karouzou, S.,

JHS 92, 1972, 69-70, suggest that the dog emerging from a cave may be Kerberos, and Karouzou that the seated goddess may be Hekate.

Statues

From the Acropolis. - Payne, H./Mackworth-Young, G., Archaic Marble Sculpture from the Acropolis (1936) no. 638 pl. 96, 3; no. 431 pl. 124, 4; Schrader, H., Die archaischen Marmorbildwerke der Akropolis (1939) 290 nos. 414, 415. - About 510-500 B.C. - No. 638: statuette torso of H.; no. 431: small plinth with feet of man and four animal paws. Against identification as H. and Kerberos, see Boardman 7 n. 22.

2626. Marble fr. Athens. From Athens (near theatre of Dionysos). - Hartwig, P., Jdl 8, 1893, 164 n. 9; Brommer, Denkmälerlisten I 92, 2. - «Torso of Kerberos» is phallos-beast published by Buschor, E., AM 53, 1928, 96-108, Beil. 29, 30 (see Boardman 7 n. 22).

2627. «Argive votive monument by Antiphanes» commemorating the founding of Messene, at Delphi. Lost. - Paus. 10, 10, 5; Pomtow, RE Suppl. IV (1924) 1229-1233 s.v. «Delphi». - 370-369 B.C. - Kerberos is not mentioned by Pausanias, but on one of the blocks identified as the base of this monument, there are traces of human feet and animal paws (cf. Fazio 85-86).

ROMAN

H. usually has his lionskin on his l. arm or shoulder, less often on his head (2631, 2638, 2649, 2652, 2661-2662, 2667), and holds his club in his l. hand. Kerberos usually has three canine heads, sometimes with the central one larger (leonine on 2640, 2642, 2656, 2666) than the other two. H. and Kerberos are alone except on 2639 (Hermes or Theseus), 2643 (Hermes, ianitor orci?), 2648 (unidentified figure), 2650 (ianitor orci), 2653 (bearded man), and when associated with other myths (2672-2673; see → Alkestis 20 [= 16*], 24*, 28*).

Coin

11. Herakles stands with chained Kerberos

Usually H. faces front, with his club in his l. hand and the leash in his r., while Kerberos sits or stands on the l. (in cave on 2634-2635). This is the type shown on [Dodekathlos] 1728 (gold bell), probably on 1733 (sarcophagus; H. damaged), and 1756 (silver cup).

12. Herakles and Kerberos pulling in opposite directions

H. as in section 13 below, moving r., with Kerberos on the l. This is the type shown on [Dodekathlos] 1727 (silver relief cup rim) and 1759 (ivory relief plaque), both with Kerberos sitting.

Stone reliefs

2639. (= [Dodekathlos] 1745*) Stone vase, «Tazza Albani». Rome, Mus. Torlonia 383. – Said to be Augustan. – Restored. On far side of Kerberos, naked youth wearing petasos (Hermes? Visconti: The-seus?) walking r., looking back.

13. Herakles leads Kerberos

a) moving right

The usual scheme shows H., with lionskin and club on l. shoulder or arm, leash in r. hand, stepping towards r. with his l. leg advanced and flexed, r. leg straight, pulling Kerberos after him and looking back l. Kerberos stands or sits on the l. (in mouth of cave: 2643. 2650. 2655–2656; in doorway: 2648–2649). This is the type shown on [Dodekathlos] 1725. 1730 (sarcophagi); 1737 (relief).

Wall painting

A.D. (Andreae: about A.D. 180). – Strigil sarc.: H. and Kerberos in central panel. H. (lionskin on head) leading Kerberos on wide strap through doorway.

2650. (= [Dodekathlos] 1752*, = Ianitor Orci 3) Roman. London, BM 2300. – A.D. 150–180. – Kerberos in cave, with ianitor orci in overhanging rock above. The labour is placed on far l. of long side. The ianitor orci does not appear on the other sarcophagi. Cf. [Dodekathlos] 1720–1721. 1723. 1734. Possibly similar was the lost sarcophagus, once in Constantinople, SarkRel III 1 no. 123.

2652. (= 2536a) Asiatic. Sevastopol, Cherson. Hist. Arch. Mus. 3/35678. From Chersonesos. – Late 2nd cent. A.D. – Fragment. H. with lionskin on head.

Gem

Other reliefs

Most of these are nearly mirror images of the preceding group. H. leans towards the l., putting weight on his r. leg; raising his club in his r. hand, he looks back r. at Kerberos, pulling on the leash or chain with his l. hand while Kerberos sits or stands in mouth of cave on the r. This is the type shown on [Dodekathlos] 1716 (sarcophagus). 1741 (mosaic). 1744 (textile). On 2663 H. is shown in back view.

COMMENTARY

The earliest representations of the labour occur at the beginning of the 6th cent. B. C. On a Corinthian cup (2553) H. is shown in the Underworld, armed with his bow and followed by Hermes, threatening Hades with a stone. The god and his dog (single-headed with snakes springing from his body) flee in opposite directions. The goddess standing in front of Hades' throne, preventing the attack, may be Persephone or possibly Athena, given the early date of the vase and the Homeric passages referring to Athena's and Hermes' participation in the labour (Il. 8, 362-369; Od. 11, 623-626). Although there is a suggestion of violence in some later Underworld scenes (2559. 2566. 2567. 2570), this is the only preserved illustration where H. threatens Hades himself. A Cretan relief pithos (2621) of about the same date shows a single-headed beast, with a snake's head over its back, being led to the r., but too little of the fragment is preserved for a secure interpretation as H. and Kerberos.

In the middle of the 6th cent. B. C. illustrations of H. leading or driving Kerberos begin to appear on vases. The subject is almost certainly recognizable on an Attic bf. cup of about 560-550 B. C. (2576) where H. leads a small single-headed creature on a stout chain. A contemporary Laconian cup (2605) shows H. driving a triple-headed Kerberos ahead of him, with Hermes preceding them, and the same scene appears on a slightly later Attic bf. cup (2606), where, as usual in archaic Attic art, Kerberos has two heads. Both these artists emphasize the size and ferocity of Kerberos, who has writhing snakes on his body and a dangerous snake-headed tail. The club and chain are conspicuous. The Attic artist has added a female spectator who may be either Athena or Persephone. The confident presentation on 2605-2606 suggests that the composition was already familiar, perhaps originally derived from Egyptian and Near Eastern tribute-bringing scenes (see Vermeule, E. T., in Festschr. F. Brommer [1977] 298).

On a bf. amphora by Exekias, dated about 545-530 B. C. (2607), H. (without club or chain), Kerberos and Hermes are shown as on 2606, but here they are accompanied by three women and two men (all without attributes), and approach a goddess facing them on the r. Taken together with the obverse of the vase, where H. sits beside Zeus in Olympus, the Kerberos scene has been thought to show H.'s earlier triumph over death, his initiation at Eleusis (see Schefold, SB II 122-123). There is some support for this interpretation from another fragmentary amphora from the same workshop (2592) where on the neck H., preceded by Athena and Iolaos (?), leads Kerberos towards a goddess on the r., while on the body of the vase H. stands with Athena beside the chariot of Demeter in a gathering of deities which includes Triptolemos and Ploutodotas.

Straightforward scenes with H. leading Kerberos become very popular on Attic vases, especially bf., in the last quarter of the 6th cent. B. C. The basic type seen already on 2576, where H. strides along, looking back at Kerberos and brandishing his club, is retained although the direction of movement is usually to the r. The chain is often replaced by a simple leash (2581) or sometimes omitted (2585). The scene usually includes Hermes, whose position varies, and very often Athena, who normally stands statuelike beside Kerberos (2581. 2587). The most-repeated composition shows H. on the r., Kerberos in the middle with Athena beside him forming the central axis, and Hermes following on the l. (2587). Some of the rf. painters show a certain independence: on 2583 H. has a bow instead of his club; on 2586, H. and Hermes flee to the l. before a savage Kerberos. The additional male (youth with a bow on 2585, with a spear on 2594; bearded man in chlamys on 2582. 2595, with a bow on 2592) who appears in some of the bf. scenes may sometimes be Iolaos, but cannot be securely identified.

The driving type is less common, preserved only on bf. vases. It is generally similar in its essentials to 2606, often with the addition of Athena beside Kerberos (2611), as in the leading scenes. The goddess standing on the l. appears again on 2608 (without attributes); on a late 6th cent. B. C. vase (2614), she is clearly identifiable as Persephone standing in her portico, watching the others depart. Variations are minor. On 2608, H. has a sword rather than his club. The chain is sometimes omitted, whether Kerberos is docile (2608) or angry (2612); on 2610 H. holds him by the tail. Hermes may follow H., as on 2609. On a late 6th cent. amphora (2613) the anonymity of the figures, including H., has led to conflicting interpretations.

The nature of H.'s task is variously portrayed. Some painters, especially the earlier ones, emphasize the hazards of transporting a dangerous beast (2581-2582. 2586. 2605). In some scenes H.'s attitude remains aggressive despite Kerberos' amenable behavior (2584. 2608). A few artists suggest the difficulty of dragging a large, unwilling animal, as on the Lamprai base (2579) where the shape of the block dictates H.'s posture and makes a particularly convincing image. On a bf. neck-amphora (2587) H.'s usual running stride is converted to express leverage as he uses both hands to pull Kerberos.

Although the journey scenes mostly take place in an unspecified context, on a number of bf. vases the presence of one or both of the Underworld gods helps establish the location of the scene. Persephone and Hades stand on the l., while the standard H. and Kerberos group (the leading type except on 2614) is shown proceeding to the r., escorted by Hermes and Athena (2593. 2596. 2597, where Hades sits without Persephone, while Athena and Hermes hurry along on side B; 2614, where Persephone is alone in the portico). Persephone and Hades are separated to flank the scene on 2594. An unusual variant (2596) shows H. walking beside Kerberos, directing him with his club, but looking back at Persephone and Hades (a rare instance when H. looks away from Kerberos). The palace of Hades is occasionally indicated on the l. by a portico (2597) or a column (2594). A bf. vase from the first quarter of the 5th cent. B. C. (2578), shows H. leading Kerberos from a cave on the l., a motif probably inspired by the familiar image on vases of this period of other animals emerging from caves (e.g. the Lion, 1889-1891).

In the last quarter of the 6th cent. B. C., Attic vase painters take an interest in a new aspect of the story, the capture of Kerberos. Two closely-related amphorae (2554-2555) dated about 525-510 B. C., show H. outside the palace of Hades crouching before Kerberos who emerges from the portico on the r. With his club laid aside and the chain lowered in his l. hand, H. reaches out cautiously to stroke the hound which he clearly means to take by persuasion rather than force. On 2554 Athena stands on the l., making an encouraging gesture, but not actively intervening; the Underworld gods are not shown. On 2555, Hermes, replacing Athena on the l., bends supportively over H., while Persephone walks beside Kerberos, with both arms outstretched over him (perhaps a gesture of conveyance).

In other examples of this scene, H. is usually shown standing rather than crouching (on 2560, where he half-crouches, Athena stands between him and Kerberos, with a consequent loss of dramatic tension), often holding both club and chain in his r. hand, while quieting Kerberos with his l. 2566 gives an exceptional picture of H. striding aggressively towards the palace with shouldered club. A few bf. vases show H. slipping the chain under one of Kerberos' heads (2568). Usually tractable, but sometimes hostile (2559, 2561), Kerberos stands or sits (2557) outside or inside the palace. Athena and Hermes together or separately accompany H. Athena usually stands on the l. Hermes most often stands or walks beside Kerberos, sometimes helping to control him (2559) or negotiating with Persephone (2560). Occasionally he comes between H. and Kerberos, pacifying the hound on 2558 (perhaps with the use of a charm: see Brommer, H. 45; cf. 2614) and crouching to chain him on 2564. Of the Underworld gods, Persephone is most often present, usually as a spectator in her portico on the r. She sometimes appears to give her blessing to the deed (2556, 2558, 2562 where H. seems to ask her permission). Rarely, she runs off in alarm (2564, 2566). Hades' attitude seems more variable. On 2558 and 2561 he is agreeable to the undertaking; on 2559, 2567 and 2570 he tries to oppose it. The portico is almost always shown. A tree representing the grove of Persephone appears on 2554-2555 and 2559. The large, bearded snake beside Kerberos on 2562-2563 and 2565 may emphasize his chthonic associations.

The composition of these scenes is generally consistent despite variations in the mood, details, and placement of the figures, but occasionally the subject is treated differently. A rf. cup (2570) shows H. and a single-headed Kerberos both facing the palace on the l., from which an irate man, presumably Hades, rushes forth while his consort waits within. On a fragmentary bf. vase (2574) H. approaches two deities seated on the l. (Persephone and Hades?), behind whose throne Kerberos stands chained.

Both in conception and in composition, the illustrations of H. approaching Kerberos in the Underworld represent a significant break with the traditional depiction of the labour. No trace of a major visual source which might have inspired them directly has survived. It has been suggested that both they and the earlier bf. vases, 2592 and 2607, reflect the tradition set forth in a lost 6th cent. B. C. poem which dealt with H.'s katabasis and probably his initiation at Eleusis (see Boardman 9). The subject is found only on archaic Attic vases.

The influence of the new iconography is evident on a group of Attic vases showing H. abducting Kerberos from the Underworld. The portico remains on the r., usually with Persephone in it, and Kerberos, now chained, emerging from it as H. leads him off to the l.; on 2599-2600 and 2602 Athena stands on the l., and Hermes crouches as if still coaxing the hound (cf. 2564) although it is now captured (see Sourvinou-Inwood 30-35). Most of these works come from the Leagros Group which was also responsible for some of the liveliest pre-capture scenes (2559-2563). The type also appears on a rf. vase of about 500 B. C. (2602), and probably on 2590, a fr. hydria by the Berlin Painter of which the r. side of the scene is unfortunately lost.

In the 2nd quarter of the 5th cent. B. C. the labour peters out from the repertory of the Attic vase painters. A few late bf. works introduce subjects which may be related. Hermes with Kerberos in the Underworld could be interpreted as the return of the hound to its masters (2617). An early 5th cent. B. C. lekythos (2623) shows H. sacrificing above a cave inhabited by a single-headed creature whose identity as Kerberos has been suggested (cf. 2624, a mid-5th cent. B. C. rf. vase where H. approaches an animal, usually identified as the Nemean lion, emerging from a cave).

Outside mainland Greece, few illustrations of the labour have been preserved from the archaic period. Two Caeretan hydriai of 530-520 B. C. (2616) depict the delivery of Kerberos to Eurystheus with a humorous twist: Eurystheus tries to hide in a giant pithos (inspired by H.'s delivery of the Erymanthian Boar; see 2105-2107, 2113-2134) as H. and the monster approach him. The subject is not found elsewhere, but the triple-headed Kerberos recalls the earlier Laconian (2605). An East Greek gem (2569) of about 500 B. C. shows a simple confrontation scene, as H. raises a sword (?) against Kerberos (again three-headed).

In Greek art, by far the greatest number of representations of H. and Kerberos are on Attic bf. vases, but the labour clearly had a place in the art of the Peloponnese (see 2553, 2605 and [Dodekathlos] 1701, the throne at Amyklai, where the brief description by Paus. 3, 18, 13 suggests that H. was leading or driving Kerberos), though very little has survived. About 460 B. C. when Kerberos appears with the other labours on the metopes from the temple of Zeus at Olympia (2591), H. is shown, without his club or lionskin, pulling the hound (single-headed) from a cave in the lower r. corner. The image may be seen as a development both in realism and in symbolism from the archaic type with H. and Kerberos on the same level (2578, 2599). Hermes, the usual guide for Underworld trips, takes his place between H. who stands in the upper world and Kerberos who comes from the lower (see Felten 21). A decade or so later on the metope from the Hephaisteion in Athens (2580), the same image is used, but without Hērmes.

An Apulian rf. oinochoe of about 430 B. C. (2615) shows H. standing at rest with Kerberos beside him. The hero faces front with his club on his l. arm, while Athena stands on the l. and the podgy three-headed hound sits between them. This is the last example of Athena in the labour. This non-narrative type is probably not an isolated occurrence (cf. an Etruscan rf. stemless cup, Leipzig T 3601, of about the same period).

The standing type appears also on a few 4th cent. B. C. reliefs. An example from Kaparelli in Boiotia (2619), where the dog is single-headed, may be connected with the cult of H. Charops at Thespieae (see Schachter, A., Cults of Boiotia, II Herakles to Poseidon [1986] 11. 31, 34. Paus. 9, 34, 5 notes the tradition that H. ascended from the Underworld with Kerberos on Mt. Laphystion in Boiotia). Two fr. reliefs, dated about 320-280 B. C., from the necropolis at Taranto (2618) show H. standing facing front: on one, Kerberos is preserved, three-headed and chained, on the l., with the rocky entrance to the Underworld on the r.; on the other, traces of H.'s lionskin and his lowered club are visible on the r. These Tarentine reliefs indicate that already by the end of the 4th cent. B. C. the Kerberos labour, with its connotations of immortality, was associated with funerary monuments.

In the 3rd quarter of the 4th cent. B. C. a new type appears on a group of Apulian rf. vases (2571, 2572): H. and Kerberos are shown pulling in opposite directions, creating a composition of tension and balance. H. is young, with or without his lionskin, with his bow on his shoulder, brandishing his club at Kerberos (three-headed with a biting snake-headed tail) who strains towards the r., while on the l. Hermes shows the way out of the Underworld. On these vases H. and Kerberos are present in the context of a larger Underworld scene, presided over by Hades and Persephone, and populated by other characteristic residents, including an Erinys, Orpheus, the Danaids, and possibly Theseus and Peirithoos. These Apulian Underworld scenes vary in detail and selection of personnel, but the overall similarity is such that a pictorial prototype, perhaps a wall-painting, seems likely (see RVAp I 430). On a slightly later fr. Tarentine relief (2620) showing an Underworld scene, the group of H. and Kerberos is thought to have resembled the type on the Apulian vases. A fr. relief from the theatre at Delphi (2573), dated between the 2nd cent. B. C. and the 1st cent. A. D. may also use this type, but in the context of H.'s other labours.

The literary sources explicitly associate the freeing of Theseus with the Kerberos labour (see Eur. Herc. 610-619; Apollod. bibl. 2 [124] 5, 12), but the Underworld scenes on Apulian vases are among the few preserved illustrations of the labour which may include Theseus. He is possibly the youth with belted sword who precedes the group of Hermes, H., and Kerberos on 2572. On 2571, the connection with H. is remote, as the two youths who may well be Theseus and Peirithoos appear in the upper zone of the composition, while H. and Kerberos occupy the lower zone.

H. and Kerberos were almost certainly included in the series of labours by Lysippos at Alyzia ([Dodekathlos] 1709). Although it is not known how the group was portrayed, many scholars believe that it must have been the source of inspiration for the predominant Roman type, which shows H. in movement to the r., looking back, with the captured Kerberos on the l. (see Fazio 89).

After the early 3rd cent. B. C., illustrations of the labour are scarce until the Roman period. An apparently unique image of H. watching Hermes ward off a ferocious three-headed Kerberos, which is included with other labours on a 2nd cent. B. C. clay relief bowl (2575), harks back to earlier times when Hermes still had a role in the story.

In Roman art, the labour is usually found in the context of other labours. The image of H. leading Kerberos which was popular on archaic Attic vases regains its appeal, becoming by far the most common type. In the Roman version, H. is usually portrayed with his lionskin and club on his l. shoulder or arm, moving r. (or, less often, to the l.) and looking back as he draws the reluctant hound after him on a short leash or chain (2650, 2656). Minor modifications show H. wearing his lionskin on his head (2649, 2652, 2661-2662), looking outwards (2646, 2661-2662) or r. (2647) instead of back, stepping forward with his r. leg rather than his l. (2644-2645). Deviations from the established type are rare (cf. 2648, 2651, 2663). Kerberos (usually three-headed, sometimes with two appendage-like small heads attached either side of a large central head, as on 2648; see → Kerberos) is often represented with braced forelegs in the mouth of his cave (2650, 2656, 2664 and [Dodekathlos] 1723, 1734, 1737, 1741). On 2655 he has emerged from his cave and bites H. Sometimes the group is compressed, with the cave omitted and Kerberos overlapping H. (2645, 2649 and probably the statues 2661-2662, where, however, Kerberos is lost). In this emblematic type, the dragging motif is suppressed and Kerberos is often reduced to the status of an attribute (cf. [Dodekathlos] 1730). Occasionally subsidiary figures are introduced: Hermes as escort on 2643 and probably on 2639; the ianitor orci in the rocks on 2650 and possibly on 2643; a youth who may be Theseus on 2668; a shadowy figure in the doorway on 2648.

A significant variation shows H. as on 2650, but with Kerberos pulling in the opposite direction (2639-2642). The dynamic composition is reminiscent of the group on the 4th cent. B. C. Apulian vases (2571-2572), except that in the Roman examples H. moves to the r. with shouldered club.

The only other common type, also with Tarentine antecedents (cf. 2618), is H. standing with Kerberos. There seems to be no predominant image. H. is usually frontal, sometimes with his club lowered (2637), sometimes with it shouldered (2631); he wears his lionskin on his head, on his shoulder, or knotted around his neck. Kerberos, though usually on the l. (in his cave on 2634-2635 and [Dodekathlos] 1728), is sometimes shown behind H.'s legs (2632-2637).

Many works indicate the location of the labour at the entrance to the Underworld. The image of Kerberos emerging from his cave is well-established by the last half of the 2nd cent. A.D. (cf. the wall painting 2643, the Dodekathlos sarcophagi 2650 and [Dodekathlos] 1723, 1734, the relief [Dodekathlos] 1737, and the coins of Alexandria 2656); it is used even when H. stands at rest (2634-2635), and when the labours are represented by H.'s adversaries alone (2668). The cave is sometimes supplemented by a tree (2655), sometimes replaced by one (2657-2658). Two sarcophagi show H. apprehensively leading Kerberos out of a doorway representing the Gate of Hades (2648-2649).

With its implications of immortality, the labour also has a place apart from the other labours, appearing in isolation, as on the central panel of the strigil sarcophagus 2649, and in scenes pertaining to death and the Underworld. Thus H. is seen leading a diminished Kerberos on a sarcophagus illustrating the Rape of Persephone (2672) and on another sarcophagus in a scene showing the introduction of a dead man into the Underworld (2673). The association with Alkestis is shown both by the juxtaposition of the Kerberos labour with scenes showing H. rescuing Alkestis (2640, Solin, Sv. Kajo; 2643 [= Alkestis 35]), and by the passive presence of Kerberos when H. stands with Alkestis (→ Alkestis 20 [= 16*], 24*, 28*).

Outside the mainstream iconography of the labour, on small-scale or provincial works which are not associated with other labours, there is a certain interest in the violent confrontation with Kerberos. A 1st cent. B.C./A.D. gem of which there are many examples (2628) shows H., with his club and lionskin laid aside, clamping Kerberos' heads between his thighs. On a coin from Saitta from the time of Gordian III (2630), H. raises a stone against Kerberos. A provincial German stele (2669), may show H. confronting Kerberos with raised club. A different method of dealing with Kerberos is shown on 2670, where H. rides him.

VALERIE SMALLWOOD

N. Herakles and the Hesperides (Labour XII)

H. was ordered by Eurystheus to obtain the apples of the Hesperides. Representations in Greek and Roman art follow the literary sources in being divided into two main schemata: (a) Atlas obtains the apples while H. takes his place supporting the heavens; (b) H. himself obtains the apples from the tree after killing the guardian snake, Ladon.

LITERARY SOURCES: The earliest and most detailed account is by Pherekydes (FGH 3 F 16, 17) in the 1st half of the 5th cent. B.C., which is also the date of Panyassis who alludes to it (Matthews, V. J., P. of Halikarnassos [1974] 68-71; Davies EGF F 10<sup>b</sup>). Pherekyd. is followed by Apollod. (bibl. 2 [113-121] 5, 11) and briefly by Hyg. astr. 2, 3; Eratosth. kat. 3;

Serv. Aen. 4, 484; Myth. Vat. I 38, 106; II 161; Peditasimos 11.

According to Pherekyd. Ge's wedding present to Hera was golden apples or an apple tree with golden fruit (cf. Asklepiades of Mendes, FGH 617 F 1; Serv. l. c.; Myth. Vat. I 38; the apples were sacred to Aphrodite). The tree was planted by Hera in the garden of the gods, which was variously located: near Atlas (Pherekyd., FGH 3 F 16b; Eratosth. l. c.; Peditasimos l. c.; Myth. Vat. I 106; Schol. Germ. Caes. p. 117 Breysig); beyond Okeanos (Hes. theog. 215); at the ends of the world (Soph. Trach. 1100; Eur. Hipp. 742-751); in the land of the Aithiopes (Mimnermos, West IEG fig. 12, 7-10; Verg. Aen. 4, 480-482); in remotest Africa (Serv. l. c.); in Libya (Agatharchides, GGMI 115-116, 7; Apoll. Rhod. 4, 1398-1399; Serv. Aen. 4, 483; cf. Ps.-Skylax peripl. 108; Plin. nat. 5, 3-4 and 5, 31: note the find place of our 2714, 2721, 2722 [Cyrene], and 2747 [Leptis Magna], on which see Brommer, JdI 57, 1942, 118; idem, H. 50; Metzger 208-209; Stucchi, S., QuadLibya 8, 1976, 19-73); in the land of the Hyperboreans (Apollod. l. c.; Tzetz. chil. 2, 357, 377-378). From the series of Labours which Pherekyd. describes he places the garden in the north (Robert, Heldensage 490; Sittig 1246-1247). Atlas was also thought to have lived in Phrygia (Herodot., FGH 31 F 13). See also on → Atlas.

In the Hesperides garden lived a great snake: hundred-headed (Pherekyd. l. c.); son of Typhon and Echidna (Pherekyd; Hyg. fab. praef. 39), or of Phorkys and Keto (Hes. theog. 333-335), or of Ge (Peisandros, FGH 16 F 8 = Davies EGF p. 134 F dub. 3). It was called Ladon (Apollod. Rhod. 4, 1396); it had a tawny back (Eur. Herc. 397), and never slept (Serv. Aen. 4, 484; Myth. Vat. I 38, 106; II 161; Schol. Germ. Caes. p. 118 Breysig [= Davies EGF Panyassis F 10<sup>b</sup>; Solinus 24, 2, 4; Lucanus 9, 363; Sen. Herc. f. 531-532). The snake guarded the golden apples (Ov. met. 4, 646-647) after they had been stolen by the Hesperides (Pherekyd., FGH 3, F 16b; Serv. l. c.; Myth. Vat. I 106; II 161), or by Aphrodite for Hippomenes (Hes. choiai fig. 76 Merkelbach/West; Schol. Theokr. 3, 40; Serv. Aen. 3, 113; Myth. Vat. I 39). Aphrodite had picked three apples (Serv. l. c.; Myth. Vat. I 39). According to other sources the Hesperides themselves guarded the apples (Hes. theog. 215-216).

On the descent, names and number of the Hesperides, → Hesperides.

Pherekyd. (l. c.) tells how H., advised by the nymphs, daughters of Zeus and Themis, wrestled with Nereus forcing him to reveal where the apples were kept. He goes to Tartessos, hence to Libya where he kills → Antaios, then Memphis near the Nile where he kills → Bousiris; thence via Thebes to Libya and by sea on Helios' golden bowl (but see Jacoby ad loc.) to liberate Prometheus (in the Caucasus; Apollod. bibl. 2 [119-121] 5, 11). Prometheus advises him not to take the apples himself but to ask Atlas to do so for him. H. accordingly takes Atlas' place supporting the heavens, and Atlas returns with three apples (Apollod. l. c.) but will not take on the burden again and declares that he will take the apples to Eurystheus himself. H. pretends to agree and asks Atlas to take his place for a moment while he puts a cushion on his head, but he then runs off with the apples to Eurystheus at Mycenae. According to Apollod. (l. c.) Eurystheus gave them back to H. as a present, and H. in his turn gave them to Athena. H.'s trick with Atlas is the subject of a satyr-play of unknown date: Pap. Bodmer XXVIII, MusHelv 33, 1976, 1-23; TrGF II adesp. F 655.

At the end of his account Apollod. goes on to tell the other version of the Labour in which H. kills the snake and takes the apples. This is also old, cited in Soph. Trach. 1099-1100 and Eur. Herc. 394-399 (cf. Panyassis, Davies EGF F 10; Apoll. Rhod. 4, 1400-1401, 1433-1435; Eratosth. kat. 3, 4 p. 60-65 Robert; Hyg. astr. 2, 3, 1; Schol. Germ. Caes. p. 117 Breysig; Sen. Herc. f. 530-532; Lucanus 9, 363-366; Solinus 24, 4; Serv. Aen. 4, 246, 484; Myth. Vat. I 38, 106; II 161; III 13, 5; Schol. Stat. Theb. 2, 280; Anekd. Par. 2, 381). Later the Hesperides were turned into a poplar, an elm and a willow, to help the Argonauts (Apoll. Rhod. 4, 1427-1431).

Diod. (4, 27, 1-5) explains H.'s visit to Atlas and the land of the Hesperides not by the apples, but by Atlas' introduction of H. to Astrology (cf. Herodot., FGH 31 F 13), as a reward for freeing his seven daughters (Hesperides or Atlantides, excelling in beauty and wisdom) from robbers who had seized them for Bousiris, who was also killed by H.

Philostr. (im. 2, 20) has a contest of strength between H. and Atlas, and not the Labour. Diod. l. c. (cf. Serv. Aen. 4, 484; Myth. Vat. I 39; II 161) also offers a logical explanation by which the apples (μῆλα) are taken for sheep (μῆλα) of golden colour.

2679. (= [Dodekathlos] 1701) Throne of Apollo at Amyklai, by Bathykses. Lost. - Paus. 3, 18, 10. - Later 6th cent. B.C. - Atlas (= Atlas 23) represented but no details about context.

2. Herakles, Atlas, Athena

2680. (= [Dodekathlos] 1702* with bibl., = Atlas 8* with bibl.) Volute crater, Attic rf. Malibu, Getty Mus. 77.AE.11. - ARV 186, 51: Kleophrades P.; Add 188; GettyMusJ 4, 1977, 64-69 fig. 10. - About 490 B.C. - Athena seated; H. with quiver, lionskin over head and on l. arm, club in l. hand, reaches out to the tree with Ladon (at least three heads) coiled around it; at r. Atlas supporting the heavens.

2681. (= Hesperides 72a) Pointed amphora, Attic rf. Germany, private. - Cahn, H. A., in AGRP (Copenhagen) 107-116 figs. 1-7; Copenhagen P. - About 475 B.C. - A: Apple tree with coiled snake, → Okeanos to l., → Strymon to r., both seated on blocks; men and women attend (one woman named Amanaos). B: H. seated beneath apple tree, looking round to a woman facing Nilos (→ Neilos). Athena holding the apples stands before H. and stretches out her hand to him. Behind her another man (→ Atlas?) seated before a third tree, with a woman before him.

2682. (= Atlas 3* with bibl., = Athena 525) Shieldband relief, bronze. Basel, Antikenmus. From Sicily? - Scheffold, SB II 123 fig. 154; Kunze, E., in Berger/Lullies, SigLudwig II (1982) 241-247 figs. 9, 12, 13. - About 540 B.C. - At l. Atlas supporting heavens. At r. H. (chiton, lionskin, bow, quiver, sword, club with snake-head terminal) holds apples, moving away but looking back. Before him Athena gesticulating. Replica: Olympia B 4836 (Kunze 241, 244).

2683. (= [Dodekathlos] 1705** with bibl., = Atlas 9*, = Athena 529c) Marble metope from the temple of Zeus, Olympia. Olympia Mus. - Ashmole/Yalouris, o. c. 1705, pl. 188. - About 460 B.C. - H., naked, supports heavens on hands and shoulders, on which a cushion. Behind him Athena raises her hand to help bear the weight. In front Atlas presents the apples.

3. Herakles, Atlas, Hesperides and others

2684. (= Atlas 10 with bibl., = Hesperides 65 with bibl.) Painted screens by the throne of Zeus in the temple at Olympia, by Panainos. Lost. - Paus. 5, 11, 5-6. - 440-430 B.C. - Apparently two scenes: (a) Atlas supporting heavens and earth with H., beside him ready to take his place; (b) two Hesperides bringing apples.

S. Italian rf. vases

2685. (= Atlas 13* with bibl., = Hesperides 54) Amphora, Campanian. London, BM F 148 - LCS 667, 1: Owl-pillar group; Gerhard pl. 20, 4; Brommer 119, 2; Schauenburg, K., AntK 5, 1962, pl. 17, 4; idem, AA 1989, 31 with n. 50; Vollkommer 19 fig. 25. - Mid 5th cent. B.C. - H. naked, lionskin on head, supports heavens (half sphere with crescent and stars). At r. goddess (Athena, Hera, or Gaia; cf. 2688a). At l. Atlas approaches tree with two snakes on it. Beyond tree standing Hesperid with hand stretched to snake.

2686. (= Atlas 12* with bibl., = Astra 74; = Hesperides 56*) Volute crater, Apulian («Archemoros vase»). Naples, Mus. Naz. 81934 (H 3255). From Ruvo. - RVAp II 496, 42b: Darius P.; Schauenburg, K., AntK 5, 1962, 55-59 pl. 17, 3; Vollkommer 18 fig. 23. - About 350 B.C. - Atlas at centre supports heavens, looking at H. (lionskin) leaning on his club. Behind H. Athena seated looking back to H., small Nike between them. Above her Phosphoros mounted. Beyond Atlas Helios on diphros to l. Beneath Atlas the tree with Ladon and seven Hesperides.

2687.* Bell crater, Apulian. Once Caputi and Moretti Colls. - Trendall, Phlyax Vases 38, 45 pl. 2; Trendall/Webster, Illustrations II, 13. - About 380 B.C. - Young H. frontal, naked, lionskin at back, supports the heavens. At l. satyr with his bow and quiver, at r. another with his club.

2689. (= Atlas 6 with bibl., = Hesperides 64) Sculpture group of cedar wood in Treasury of Epidamnians at Olympia, by Theokles. Lost. - Paus. 5, 17, 2; 6, 19, 8 (= Overbeck, SQ nos. 328, 325); Schefold, SB II 123. - 550-525 B.C. - Atlas supports heavens. H. by the tree and five Hesperides (taken later to the Heraion by the Eleians, where they were seen by Paus.).

4. Herakles alone in the Garden

2690. Skyphos, Corinthian bf. fr. Megara Hyblaea. - Megara Hyblaea II 17 pl. 22. - Mid 7th cent. B.C. - Branches of an apple tree (?) at r. and stretched hand with bow at l.

Attic bf. vases

2691. Lekythos. Mainz, Brommer Coll. - ABV 499, 34: class of Athens 581 (ii); Brommer 108 figs. 4-6; Schefold, SB II 124 fig. 155. - Early 5th cent. B.C. - H. (lionskin, quiver), club raised over head, picks apples from the tree; Ladon attacks H.

2692.* Lekythos. Berlin (DDR), Staatl. Mus. V.I. 3261. - Haspels, ABL 198, 2 pl. 18, 1: Cactus P.; ABV 472; Para 212; Brommer, H. 48 pl. 28b; Boardman, ABFV fig. 233. - About 500 B.C. - H. (chiton, lionskin, quiver/bow), club in r. hand, strides away from the tree looking back at the two-headed Ladon.

Attic rf. vase

2692a)* Cup. Bochum, Univ. - Kunisch, N., in Kanon, Festschr. E. Berger (1988) 305-309 pl. 87. - About 470 B.C. - I: Naked H. frontal, arms bent at waist supporting on bowed head and back the heavens with crescent moon and stars. He bends l. looking at a stool bearing cushion and clothes. The indication of undressing and the presence of the cushion, which alludes to H.'s trick played on Atlas, identify the figure as H. not Atlas.

Reliefs

2694.* Marble relief. Mariemont B 159. From Asia Minor (Nisyros?). - Faider-Feytmans, G., Les Ant. de Mariemont (1952) 84-85 G 50 pl. 30; Lévêque, P./Donnay, G., L'art grec du Mus. de M. (1967) no. 106; Borbein, Campanareliefs 170 n. 896. - 2nd cent. B.C. (Lévêque); Roman (Borbein). - H., naked, lionskin on l. arm, kneels on branch of the tree to break it (pose adopted from his Labour with the deer - Lévêque); below, his club; Ladon hangs dead on the tree.

2696. (= 2194) Clay relief bowl, fr. Athens, Agora P 19881. - Hausmann, Reliefbecher 90-91 pl. 64, 3; Agora XXII no. 187 pl. 34. - Hellenistic. - The tree with Ladon at l. H. (lionskin) beside it with bent head, picking the apples (possibly supporting heavens). Cf. Agora Mus., from Phnyx: Hesperia Suppl. X (1956) 92 pl. 35, 2.

2697.* (= 2052) Bronze relief fr. Once Berlin, Staatl. Mus. - AA 1894, 117-118 fig. 12; AM 41, 1916, 44 fig. 8; Schefold, SB II 124 n. 302. - Late 6th cent. B.C. - H. naked walks r. with club raised, probably holding an apple, looking back at the tree.

2698.* Silver ring. London, BM 72.6-4.104. - Marshall, BM FingerRings no. 1087 pl. 27; Richter, EnglGemsGE no. 231 (as gold); Boardman, GGFR pl. 780. - 4th cent. B.C. - H. naked, lionskin over arm, club in r. hand, before the tree with Ladon.

2699.* AR stater, Phaistos, 322-300 B.C. - BMC Crete 62, 8-9 pl. 15, 4; Le Rider, G., Monnaies crétoises (1966) 22, 25-30 pls. 4, 1-5; 21, 20-21. - Obv.: H. stands frontal, naked with bow, lionskin, and r. hand on club. At l. a snake rears up; at r. the tree. Rev.: bull. Other coins of Phaistos (see 2826) with H. attacking a snake, may be related.

5. Herakles in the Garden with Hesperides

The alabastron, Nauplion 136 (Brommer 114 figs. 8-10; idem, H. 49. 66. 82 pl. 29) is almost certainly a forgery (Beazley ap. Brommer, Vasenlisten 72, 2; v. Bothmer, D., AJA 61, 1957, 106).

2700.* (= 2204 with bibl., = Hesperides 6 with bibl.) Amphora, Attic bf. Boulogne, Mus. Beaux-Arts 421. - Schauenburg, K., MededRome 41, 1979, 12. 232 fig. 18. - About 510 B.C. - H. (chiton, lionskin, sword), club in r. hand, walks l. with head turned back to a deer, tree (no snake) and two women. The latter are certainly Hesperides. Brommer thinks of a misunderstanding of the myth rather than a conflation of the myths of the apples and the deer (Brommer 107). Schauenburg takes it for H. leaving the Garden, the deer being irrelevant.

Attic rf. vases

2701. (= Hesperides 7* with bibl.) Hydria. Champagne (Ill.), Krannert Art Mus. 70-8-4. - Midwestern Colls no. 100: Syracuse P. - 470-460 B.C. - H. (chiton, lionskin) with raised club, holding apples, hurries

l. looking back to three Hesperides, one of them holding a branch of the tree (with Ladon).

South Italian rf. vases

2704. (= Hesperides 37) Pelike, Lucanian. Once Morchini Coll. (Naples), then Turin; lost. - LCS 172, 986: Primato P.; Gerhard pl. 21, 1. - 350-325 B.C. - Tree with Ladon, to whom a Hesperid offers a phiale while offering branches to H. at the l. H. naked, with lionskin, standing frontal on a basis like a statue, r. hand on club, bow in l. hand.

2705. (= Hesperides 61) Hydria, Campanian. Naples, Mus. Naz. 82294 (H 2852). - LCS 429, 487: Danaid P.; Schauenburg 479 fig. 18. - About 325 B.C. - H. to r., foot on rock, naked but for cloak on l. shoulder, spear, apple in l. hand, picks another from the tree. A Hesperid beyond offers a phiale to Ladon.

Reliefs

2706. (= [Dodekathlos] 1706* with bibl., = Hesperides 83 with bibl.) Marble metope on the temple of Hephaistos, Athens. - Koch, o. c. 1706, pls. 22, 2; 23; Morgan, o. c. 1706, 212; Thompson, H. A. T., AJA 66, 1962, 340-341. - About 450 B.C. - Naked H. with apples in r. hand standing frontal. His head was probably turned to a standing woman at the l. with l. hand raised (a Hesperid, or Athena, which would be a novel version with presentation to the goddess).

Delphi Mus. 5432 + 1798. - BCH 74, 1950, 224-232 pl. 34 figs. 1. 6; AJA 82, 1978, 227 fig. 1. - 2nd/1st cent. B. C.? - Poorly preserved. At l. H. naked with hand raised (to pick apples?). At r. a woman running r. with arm raised and head turned to H.

2709.* (= Hesperides 43) Clay relief dish. Olympia Mus. T 199. From Olympia. - Hausmann, U., OlympBer X (1981) 209-211 fig. 77. - 3rd cent. B. C. - Tree with Ladon at l.; Hesperid with r. hand on tree turns to H. (naked, lionskin) leaning on his club, l. hand at waist.

2710. (= [Dodekathlos] under 1711, = Hesperides 44) Clay cup. Athens, NM 12618. - Hausmann, Reliefbecher 96-97 n. 416 pl. 67, 2; Sinn, Becher 104 MB 40 pl. 15, 3; Hausmann, o. c. 2709, 223 fig. 83. - 2nd cent. B. C.? - Ladon on tree being held back by a Hesperid holding a branch. Before her H. naked, leaning on club, lionskin at back.

2711. (= Hesperides 42) Clay amphora, black, with relief appliqués, Alexandrian (?). Athens, NM 2143. - Moreno 173 fig. g. - 3rd cent. B. C. - On separate plaques: H. naked, lionskin on l. arm, r. hand on club; three women, wreaths in r. hands (Hesperides?).

2713.* (= Hesperides 10) Garnet intaglio in gold ring. Naples, Mus. Naz. 25132. From Pompeii, Casa del Fauno. - Breglia, L., Cat. Oreficerie (1941) 67 no. 518 pl. 29, 3; Siviero, R., Gli ori e le ambre (1954) no. 349 pls. 218b, 219. colour 211. - 2nd/1st cent. B. C. - H. naked at r., lionskin on r. arm, with bow and club, faces the tree with Ladon. Three small Hesperides run away.

Statuary

2715. (= Hesperides 23) Marble group. Schloß Wörlitz. - EA II 385; Amelung, W., RM 20, 1905, 214-216. - Roman copy of Hellenistic (Pergamene) original. - At centre H., lionskin on l. arm, l. hand on club resting on tree stump. At l. traces of a kneeling woman. At r. two more women, the first raising her arm to H. All the women at reduced scale and much restored. The number of women suggests the Hesperides (Amelung). Variants are: a) Tazoult, Mus. S 81; Cagnat, R., Mus. de Lambèse (1895) 50 pl. 4, 6; man beside tree with quiver, woman crouching to r. with hand stretched to l.; b) Vatican; Amelung, SkulptVat-Mus I 830 pl. 92; leg of man, lionskin and bow, woman with r. hand and head raised, tree with snake. Cf. also the group on the Corsini sarcophagus, 2779.

6. Herakles in the Garden with Hesperides and others

C. - On either side of tree with Ladon: at l. Chrysothemis and Asteropos standing, Hygieia seated, Klytios standing; at r. Lipara standing with apple, young H. (naked, sword) seated to l. on lionskin on rock, club upright, l. hand on ground, Iolaos with chlamys and spear. All figures named. The peaceful standing/seated heroes in the same zone on the other side of the vase (Helera, Medeia, Arniope, Philoktetes, Akamas, Hippothoon, Antiochos, Klymenos, Oineus, Demophon, Chrysis - all named) may also belong to the picture of the garden as a representation of the Elysian fields (Kron, Phylenheroen 166-167 with bibl.). For a different view of the representation of H. in the garden of the Hesperides on this vase, as part of the Argonaut story, Walters, CVA l. c.; and Kron, o. c. 167 with n. 799.

motifs (Naples; Hermann, W., Röm. Götteraltäre [1961] 136–137 no. 62; HERCULI TUTORI) and beside H. with the lion on a provincial relief in Belgrade (OeJh 15, 1912, Beibl. 220 fig. 179).

COMMENTARY

GREEK

By about the middle of the 6th cent. B.C. the Atlas-version of H.'s Hesperides Labour is to be found on Attic bf. vases (2676) as well as on reliefs (2678, 2682) even in sculpture (2689).

The Atlas version appears down to the Classical period but not later. There are two main iconographic schemata: (1) Atlas supports the heavens (2676, 2678, 2680, 2682, 2686, 2689) with H. (a) leaving with the apples (2676, 2682), (b) trying to take them by force from Atlas (2678), (c) picking them from the tree while Atlas supports the heavens (2680), (d) standing simply beside Atlas (2684, 2686, 2689); and (2) H. supports the heavens (2677, 2683, 2685, 2687) with Atlas (a) presenting him the apples (2677, 2683), or (b) approaching the tree (2685). Once Atlas is not present, but two satyrs are playing with H.'s weapons (2687); on another vase H. is shown alone supporting the heavens (2692a). In both schemata Athena may also be present (2680, 2682, 2683). The location of the episode in the Hesperides garden may also appear in the Archaic period (2680, 2689) as well as in the South Italian vase-painting (2685, 2686). There is a third schema of the Hesperides Labour in which H. is approaching Atlas seated on a throne like a king, surrounded by other deities (on South Italian vases, 2688, 2688a; cf. the representations of H.'s Introduction to Olympus: 2867–2869). 2861 has a unique scene of Athena apparently handing the apples to H. in the company of a passive Atlas and several river gods (Nilos, Okeanos, Strymon); yet H. looks away.

The other version of the Labour, in which H. is represented in the garden picking the apples himself without Atlas' help appears even earlier, apparently in the middle of the 7th cent. B.C. (2690).

In this version H. is represented very often in the Archaic, Classical and Hellenistic periods. He may be alone (2690–2699), accompanied by the Hesperides (2700–2715), also by other deities or persons such as Iolaos (2716–2718, 2726), other heroes (2717), men (2719, 2722), a woman (2729), Athena (2718), Hermes (2719, 2729), Artemis (? 2725), Pan (2721, 2723–2725, 2728), Hera (2721), Aphrodite (? 2722), personifications (2717; and 2720 – Okeanos indicating the location and as grandfather of Atlas), satyrs (2723–2725, 2727, 2729). The omphalos on 2723 may also indicate the place («omphalos of the sea», perhaps identifying the island Ogygia, island of the Atlantid Kalypso; Metzger Représentations 208), or rather the sacred character of the temenos, as also do a column (2724) and a pillar (2728; they are too small to allude to the columns supporting the heavens; cf. Hom. Od. 1, 52–54; Jucker 196).

of actions: (a) picking himself the apples from the tree (2691. 2693. 2696. 2705), once even holding a basket (2716); stretching out his hand to pick them (2690. 2708) or raising his club against Ladon coiled on the tree (2691. 2695. 2697. 2701. 2731); striding to the tree (2680); moving away with the apples (2692. 2697. 2700. 2701); simply standing by the tree (2698. 2699. 2702. 2706. 2712-2715. 2718) sometimes holding the apples (2706. 2729. 2732) often leaning on his club (2686. 2688. 2709. 2719-2721. 2723. 2726. 2727) or supporting it upright on the ground (2699. 2707. 2722. 2724. 2725. 2729); once standing on a basis like a statue (2704); treading on a rock (2705); kneeling on a branch trying to cut it (2694); (b) seated on a rock covered with the lionskin (2703. 2707. 2712. 2717) or with his cloak (2721. 2722. 2725). Where H. is not himself trying to take the apples from the tree with the Hesperides standing by (2702. 2709. 2723. 2728) or has not got them already (2701) while the frightened Hesperides run away (2708. 2713), they may be shown offering Ladon a drink to help H. take the apples (on South Italian vases, 2704. 2705. 2726. 2727. 2729; Furtwängler, A. in ML I 2 2227; Robert, Heldensage 492-493; Brommer, F., Jdl 57, 1942, 119-120). This could be an invention of the vase-painters since it is unknown from literary sources. It has been interpreted as an indication of the changing conception of the myth in the 4th cent. B. C. (Brommer, l.c.); however, the Tabula Albana (FGH 40, c) implies and Seneca (Herc. f. 530-532) asserts that H. got the apples after having lulled the dragon to sleep. It could otherwise be interpreted as the duty of the Hesperides to feed the snake.

In the Attic art of the 5th and 4th cent. B. C. the Hesperides are represented either offering H. the apples (2707. 2717. 2719. 2722) or picking them for H. themselves (2703. 2710. 2718. 2721. 2725. 2729). The Hesperides are known in literary sources as thieves of the apples, but not in connection with H. The number of Hesperides (one to seven) on the monuments seems to depend on the space which was to be filled; only once are all seven of them represented (2786). Exceptionally Athena holds an apple on 2681, and cf. 2706.

On Attic vases of the Kerch style Eros/Erotes are often represented in various actions - leaning on H.'s shoulders or crowning him, picking apples, pointing to a Hesperid: these allude to the love of H. and one of the Hesperides (Götze 95-96; Schefold, K., Gymnasium 61, 1954, 292), unknown from the literary tradition but fitting well into the erotic atmosphere which dominates vase-painting of the late Classical period (2703. 2719. 2721. 2722. 2724. 2725). The absence of Aphrodite in such scenes (except in 2722) is inexplicable; instead, it is quite common to find Pan (2721. 2723-2725. 2728. 2729) and/or satyrs (2723-2725. 2727. 2729) probably emphasizing the rustic and idyllic character of the Hesperides garden as the Elysian fields (cf. Metzger, Représentations 207 with n. 2). However, no typical iconography of the Elysian fields seems to have existed in ancient Greek art (on such pictures: Neutsch, B., RM 60/61, 1953/54, 67-68; Karousou, S., ArchDelt 19, 1964 [1965] 7-8). Sometimes a Nike (2686. 2723) indicates the good fortune of the deed.

In later Classical Attic vase-painting, when the Labour is often represented in contrast to the rare representations in early and ripe Classical art (2683. 2684. 2701. 2706. 2707) the Atlas-version of the myth and the fight of H. with Ladon are not represented as they had been in the Archaic and early Classical periods. Instead, the hero appears standing, or seated quietly in the peaceful garden of the Hesperides, which symbolizes the Elysian fields and alludes to the eternal youth which the hero will enjoy through possession of the apples (2702. 2703. 2717. 2719-2725; the absence of the tree on 2719 is remarkable: see Furtwängler, A., ML 1, 2, 2229; Robert 492-493; Schweitzer 134 with n. 1; Brommer, Jdl 57, 1942, 118; Metzger, Représentations 207. 209; Brommer, H. 49-50; Kron, Phylenheroen 167 with older bibliography in n. 803. This is also true for South Italian vase-painting but the Atlas-version is to be found here as well (2686. 2688), perhaps influenced by the satyr-play 'Atlas', as Brommer suggests (in Jdl 57, 1942, 119).

In the Archaic period H. is very rarely represented naked (2697. 2714); he is often wearing a short chiton (2677. 2682. 2692. 2716) under the lionskin which is tied round his neck and covers head and back (2676. 2677. 2682. 2691. 2692. 2700. 2714. 2716. 2730); once it is carried round his l. arm like a shield (2680; a motive quite common in later periods).

Lionskin and club are held by H. (2680. 2682. 2692. 2697. 2700. 2730), rarely raised against Ladon (2691. 2697. 2731), sometimes lie on the ground (2677. 2716), or are held upright on it (2714). Other weapons may be also shown: often the quiver at his back (2676. 2680. 2682. 2691. 2692. 2716. 2730), once in the field (2677), rarely a sword (2682. 2700; once H. threatens Atlas with it, 2679) as well as the bow (2692. 2730), once also lying in the field (2677).

In the Classical and the Hellenistic periods H. is always shown naked, exceptionally wearing the short chiton (2701. 2728). The lionskin, when not covering the rock on which the hero sits (2703. 2707. 2717), or wrapped round the l. arm (2688a. 2694. 2698. 2713. 2715. 2726), covers head and back as usual; sometimes the lionskin is replaced by a cloak, on which H. may be seated (2722. 2725) or which is wrapped round the l. arm (2712. 2721. 2723), exceptionally hanging from the l. shoulder (2705) or lying on a stool (2692a). Only once is H. shown holding the himation like a shawl round his lower body (2724).

The club is always represented, whether held as usual (2688a. 2698. 2703. 2713. 2728), or held upright on the ground (2681. 2699. 2707. 2712. 2715. 2717. 2722. 2724. 2725. 2729), or with H. leaning on it (2686. 2688. 2709. 2710. 2719-2721. 2723. 2726. 2727). Exceptionally it is carried on his shoulder (2693. 2718) or raised against Ladon (2695. 2701). A quiver (2688. 2688a. 2703. 2712. 2726. 2729) hanging at his back, or lying on the ground (2723), or between H.'s legs (2707), as well as the bow

H. is almost always represented heedless (exceptions 2683. 2685. 2701. 2724), sometimes wreathed or crowned (2703. 2719. 2723. 2724. 2727. 2728) in harmony with the idyllic-erotic atmosphere of these pictures.

ROMAN

In the Roman period the representation of H. in the Hesperides garden, either alone or with the Hesperides, predominates. No other persons or gods are present, except on 2783, when Pan and two Nymphs are shown. Only once, on a gem, H. is represented in the Atlas-version supporting the heavens (2787); cf. the rf. vase, 2692a.

The Labour may be found as a single representation, with H. either alone or with the Hesperides, on wall-paintings (2742. 2744. 2770. 2771), on reliefs (2752. 2775. 2781), on gems (2754. 2755. 2757. 2782), on relief-vases (2758-2760. 2783), on lamps (2761. 2784), on coins (2765-2767. 2785; on the meaning of these representations as symbols of imperial power see Voegtli 43-44. 54-55. 61-62), and only once in sculpture (276a). More often it is represented as part of the Dodekathlon, on mosaics (2772), sarcophagi (2745-2747. 2777-2780; as a symbol of a happy life after death: Voegtli 8-9; Jacopi, I., ArchCl 24, 1972, 326-327; for the iconographic schemata of the representations on sarcophagi see Moreno 171-173); on reliefs 2747. 2751. 2772. 2773. 2776. textiles 2744, relief-vases 2758, bronze relief-utensils 2762-2764, coins 2767, medallions 2786, ivory-reliefs 2768.

In these representations H. is always standing; only once is he seated (2774). He may be picking the apples himself (2745. 2747. 2749-2752. 2754. 2759. 2760. 2763. 2772. 2776. 2778. 2784) or simply standing by the tree (2743. 2753. 2756. 2757. 2760. 2767. 2769-2771. 2777. 2780. 2782. 2783. 2786). Sometimes H. raises his club against Ladon (2744 [with snake pierced by an arrow], 2748. 2758. 2759. 2761. 2762. 2764. 2765. 2768. 2773), or strides towards the tree (2742. 2748. 2752. 2758. 2761. 2765), once offering a drink to Ladon (2755; see Lit. Sources), and once grasping the tree (2762); eventually H. is shown holding the snake (2759. 2761), or a Hesperid offers him the apples (2781). H. may also be depicted holding the apples (2767. 2769. 2780. 2785).

In the Roman representations H. is depicted either young or old, sometimes crowned (2742), or wearing a fillet (2749). He is always naked, usually with the lionskin hanging from his l. arm, exceptionally from his l. shoulder (2744. 2751), rarely covering his head and back (2779. 2780. 2787), and once the lower body (2774). He seldom has the cloak on his shoulder (2742), or wrapped round his l. arm (2770). He always carries the club, usually holding it in his r. hand (2745. 2753. 2754. 2757. 2760. 2769. 2772. 2773. 2775. 2779. 2781), often fighting Ladon with it (2744.

The Hesperides, one to three in number if shown, are mostly depicted simply standing by the tree (2774. 2775. 2777. 2778. 2783-2785), exceptionally round an altar with the snake coiled on it (2770. 2771), a motif unknown in Greek art, though a Hellenistic prototype has been proposed for the Roman paintings. The altar perhaps indicates the holy character of the garden as a temenos; cf. 2724. 2756 (column); 2728. 2783 (pillar). Sometimes they offer H. the apples (2774. 2781) or are picking them (2773) or offer Ladon a drink (2782). Once a Hesperid is represented sleeping (2776). Rarely they are seated under the tree (2780. 2783), surpassing even the idyllic atmosphere of late Classical and South Italian representations of the myth on vases, which is otherwise to be found in Roman wall-paintings (2742. 2743. 2770. 2771). Sometimes the Hesperides are running (2778. 2779. 2786), or leaving (2772), frightened. See also 3415.

The iconography of the Labour, with the hero standing beside the tree on which Ladon is coiled, and with one Hesperid standing at the other side of it, survived the Roman period and was adopted by Christian art to represent Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden with the snake and the tree (Todisco, o.c. 2714, 163-184). #### V. Herakles' expeditions

A. Herakles at Troy

H., in the course of his expedition against the Amazons, or on the expedition of the Argonautai, visits Troy. Here King Laomedon promises H. his divine horses if he kills the ketos sent by Poseidon to plague Troy because of Laomedon's failure to reward Apollo and Poseidon for building Troy's walls. H. kills the ketos and frees Hesione, the king's daughter, who had been bound to a rock as its prey. Laomedon refuses the reward. H. proceeds against the Amazons but on his return he attacks and destroys Troy, kills Laomedon and gives Hesione to his colleague Telamon. On the way to Troy H. sacrifices to Chryse on her island near Lemnos.

LITERARY SOURCES: For details of the first encounter see → Hesione and → Ketos. The Iliad has no mention of the Amazon expedition, but sends H. to Troy for Laomedon's horses with six ships and few men (s. 640-643. 648-651). He serves the king but is cheated by him and sacks Troy. Pindar stresses Telamon's role in the sack, says that he killed Laomedon, whose unjust treatment of H. was the cause of the war, which took place on the expedition to the Amazons (N. 3, 36-37; 4, 25-26; I. 6, 27-31). The story was also told in Hellan. (FGH 4 F 26b). Diod. has it as a parergon to the Argonauts' expedition (4, 32. 42. 49) with H. returning to Troy with only 18 ships to punish Laomedon. His lieutenant Oikles, left to guard the ships, was killed but H. sacks Troy, gives the kingdom to Priam, and Hesione to Telamon. Apollod. (bibl. 2 [103-104] 5, 9; 2 [134-136] 6, 4) places the encounter with Laomedon on the return from the Amazons, and the sack later still, giving H. 18 ships and otherwise offering an account similar to that of Diod. Ovid (met. 11, 213-215; 13, 22-23), Hyg. (fab. 89) and Schol. Lykophr. 34 add nothing substantial to the account, which may be a relatively late literary invention. See → Chryse I for H.'s sacrifice to her.

1. Herakles' sacrifice to Chryse

See → Chryse I 1-5 (4 = Athena 532) for the Athenian vases of about 430-390 B.C. showing the scene. In all cases H. wears only a wreath and himation, on 4 and 5 (= 2788) he is beardless (uncertain on 3) and on 4 he leans on his club, on 5 on a stick. Attending are Athena (1. 4), Philoktetes (named on 1), Lichas (named on 1. 5), Iolaos (named on 2), Nike (2), Hermes (4), Apollo (4). The rocky altar stands before the pillar supporting the cult statue (an acanthus column on 1 in this position). The altar is blazing and meat cooking on 1; on 2-4 a bull is being brought up. The occasion was that on which → Philoktetes was bitten by a snake. H. is in mufti, as he is occasionally on other scenes of sacrifice (see 1335. 1344). See also Vollkommer 55-56.

A.D. - H. is shown naked throughout. a) H. kills the ketos. b)* Telamon (?) presents H. to Laomedon (seated with sceptre and Phrygian cap) attended by two men. A horse's head to the top l. Presumably this is the negotiation for Laomedon's horses. c)* H. strides forward to r. with raised club attacking a group of men among whom is Laomedon, in Phrygian cap. d)* H. (with bow?) at r. observes the marriage of Telamon and Hesione, who hold hands (cf. Apollod. bibl. 3 [161-162] 12, 7). e)* H., seated, crowns the young Priam with a Phrygian cap, the royal emblem.

3. Herakles kills the ketos and rescues Hesione

See → Hesione and → Ketos. There are occasional Archaic representations (on Corinthian, Attic, Caeretan vases) and on a South Italian vase. It is commoner in the Roman period, in painting and reliefs, and may then be shown with cycles of the Labours. See also H. with monsters (Section VII E).

4. Herakles fights at Troy

2792.* East pediment of the Temple of Aphaia, Aigina. Munich, Glyptothek. - Ohly, D., Die Aegineten I (1976) for fullest bibl. and description of the figures, cleaned of restorations. - 490-480 B.C. - At the centre, Athena, facing the viewer, moves r. holding out her l. arm and aegis. The 2nd figure from the r. (a collapsed warrior behind him) is young H., kneeling and drawing his bow. He wears a helmet with raised cheekpieces, its crown in the form of a lion's head, and a corselet. Ohly identifies the stricken Laomedon in the prostrate figure at the extreme l.; Iolaos before H.; Priam on Athena's l. (protected by her); Telamon on her r. H.'s cheekpieces possibly took the form of the lion's lower jaw, an outline similar to that of some cheekpieces for «normal» Chalcidian helmets. The interpretation of the pediment, as H. at Troy, is not normally disputed (but cf. Robertson, HGA 166, speculating that «H.» may be Paris, and the subject the death of Achilles). U. Sinn (AM 102, 1987, 151-157) suggests that the «H.» may be Hyllus and the subject the Dorian invasion of Aigina. The west pediment probably depicts Agamemnon's Trojan war, with Ajax, son of Telamon.

5. Uncertain

2793. West pediment of the Athenian Treasury, Delphi. Delphi Mus. - FDelphes IV 4, 181. - 490-480 B.C. - Fr. of fighting figures remain, none of them identifiable. The suggestion that this might be H.'s attack on Troy is based on his prominence in the metopes.

COMMENTARY

H.'s affairs at Troy are remarkably little observed by ancient artists, apart from the fight with the ketos to rescue Hesione, which is usually treated as a separate episode, and the sacrifice to Chryse, probably prompted by Athenian interest in Lemnos at the time it is shown on vases. The probable battle at Troy on the Aphaia temple (2792) is prompted less by H. than by the participation of the Aeginetan Telamon. Only in Artemon's painting (2790) and on Pompeian walls (2791) are cycles of the story presented, presumably inspired directly by literature since there was no developed iconographic tradition for them.

B. Herakles and the Amazons

On the expedition against the Amazons, and its relationship to the Labour to get the belt of the Amazon queen Hippolyte, see Section IV, K. On the participation of Theseus, see Section XI.

C. Herakles at Oichalia

See → Eurytos I, → Iole I, → Iphitos I. Only the feast and the aftermath are shown. Apart from the scene of the feast with Eurytos on a Corinthian vase of about 600 B.C. the only representations are of H. fighting Eurytos' sons, on late Archaic Attic vases. Another Oichalian episode, not attested in literature, appears on Attic vases:

2794.* (= Bousiris 31) Cup, Attic rf. New York, MMA 12.231.2. From Cerveteri. - ARV<sup>2</sup> 319, 6: Onesimos; Richter/Hall, pl. 39; Williams, D., in ICG (Rouen) 138 fig. 8 (with new frs.). - 500-490 B.C. - B: H. with lionskin and bow (head and r. hand missing) attacks three men (with himatia, one with a basket) by an altar; tetrapod with cauldron at the l. The centre man is called Ops (ΟΠΣ). (A = Iphitos I 2: H. killing the sons of Eurytos: see → Eurytos I, Commentary. I: H. with a boy carrying luggage: = 1559 = Hyllus I 4).

2795. (= Bousiris 32*) Hydria, Attic rf. Paris, Louvre G 50. From Vulci. - ARV 188, 70: Kleophrades P.; CVA 6 pl. 52 (431), 1. 4. 5; Williams, o.c. 2794, fig. 7. - About 490 B.C. - H. in lionskin over tunic, raises his club and tramples a man before an altar with a volute crater beside it. A boy with stick and lyre, a man with kithara and man with stick run away.

COMMENTARY

See discussion in Williams o.c. The association with Oichalia is suggested by the scene on B of the cup 2794 (and the interior may be related) and the name Ops on the same cup. The setting is of sanctuary (altars) and feast (cauldron and basket - non sacrificial, as Williams - on 2794; crater on 2795). The identity of Ops is uncertain but the family of Eurytos descends from Dryops. If the Melas, son of Ops in Paus. 8, 28, 5 is the Melaneus, father of Eurytos (Paus. 4, 2, 2 with 4, 33, 5), and the Melas father of Eurytos of Pherekydes (FGH 3 F 82a) this would be an earlier brush with the family, also involving a feast. There was such an incident (Apollod. bibl. 2 [155] 7, 7) in which H. slew Laogoras, king of the Dryopes, with his children, at a feast in a sanctuary of Apollo. This appears to be the story of the vases, but with a different name for the main victim. It explains why the feast rather than sacrifice is prominent on both 2794 and 2795. (There was also a Melas, companion of H., killed in the Eurytos episode: Apollod. bibl. 2 [156] 7, 7.)

D. Herakles and the Argonauts

H. was a somewhat irregular member of the Argonaut expedition (for which see → Argonautai). The most important episode was that involving the loss of his boy Hylas in Mysia (for which see → Hylas). His association with Hylas is as early as the Wedding of Keyx ([Hes.] frg. 263 Merkelbach/West) and Kinaiathon (Davies EGF p. 142, B) but ancient representations concentrate on Hylas and the nymphs, not H. Exceptions are on Roman paintings (→ Hylas 10? 11), a mosaic (ibid. 12) and reliefs (ibid. 22. 23. 24? 34?). H. appears on the Argo with the Dioskouroi and Peleus, greeting Cheiron and Achilles on a child's sarcophagus, Rome, S. Paolo Fuori le Mura (→ Achilleus 82*, → Argonautai 5). Some authors made H. leader of the expedition (Diod. 4, 41, 2; Dionysios Skyt., FGH 32 F 6; cf. Rusten, J. S., Dion. Scytobrachion [1982] 41. 96-97) but in Apoll. Rhod. 1, 341-347 he refuses leadership. Iolaos is with him in Hyg. fab. 14, 22. In Apoll. Rhod. he plays an important part until the Hylas episode, occupying with Ankaio the middle bench («powerhouse») of the Argo (1, 396-398. 531-532, with his club near him; 1161-1171, breaking his oar), urging the heroes to leave Lemnos (1, 861-874), defeating the Gegenees at Chytos in the Propontis (1, 989-1011). Then comes the Hylas episode (I, 1207-1295) after which he leaves the expedition, though Lynkeus thought he espied him far off from Africa (4, 1477-1480). In the Tabula Albana (FGrH 40, 105-109; Sadurska, Tables 87) he joined the Dioskouroi defeating Amykos, but this is not remarked in art (→ Amykos). Most sources agree that H. left the expedition after Hylas (Apollod. bibl. I [117] 9, 19; contra, Diod. 4, 44, 5) but some allow him to carry on to Colchis (Dionys. Skyt. o.c.; Demaratus, FGrH 42 F 2; Theokr. 13, 73-75, on foot) and others have him leave at Aphetai (Hdt. 7, 193; Pherekyd., FGrH 3 F 111, the Argo declaring him too heavy). Antikleides held that it was his son Hyllos that was left behind (FGrH 140 F 2). Diod. has him kill → Phineus and restore his sons to rule (4, 44, 4) and leading the Argonauts in his sack of Troy (4, 49). Herodorus said that he never joined the expedition but spent his time with Omphale (FGrH 3 F 41). None of this activity is reflected in art, and only one vase (below) shows him at Colchis, fighting the serpent guardian of the fleece with Jason. It was, however, his association with the Argonauts that may have prompted his attendance with Athena at Medea's murder of her children on a South Italian vase (see section XII; → Athena 631) and attendance at the Games for Pelias (see 2801-2803).

H. appears in groups with other heroes and Athena which have sometimes been identified as Argonauts: e.g., the Niobid Painter's name vase, Paris G 341 (→ Argonautai 32) and Ferrara 3031 (→ Argonautai 33 = Athena 601). Cf. also the Roman relief, → Argonautai 28*, with a youth (H. or Argos) seated on a lionskin before Jason (?).

2796. (= Argonautai 21* with bibl., = Iason 39 with further refs.) Volute crater, Apulian rf. Leninograd, Hermitage B 1718 (St. 422). - RVAp I 424, 55: close associate of the Lycurgus P.; MonInst 5, pl. 11. - 350-340 B.C. - H., with club and lionskin, and Jason attack from either side the serpent coiled around the tree holding the golden fleece. With Kalais, Medeia, Eros and three other Argonauts. JOHN BOARDMAN

VI. Other principal adversaries and occasions

ABDEROS

See → Abderos. H.'s favourite, killed in the course of the Labour for Diomedes' horses (section IV, J). The dead Abderos may appear with H. on the Roman silver cup, 2439. Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 13-14.

ACHELOOS

See → Acheloos 213-267. H. wrestles with Acheloos for the hand of Deianeira. The subject appears first on gems (Acheloos 221, 222), Attic vases (Acheloos 224, 225) and a Corinthian vase (Acheloos 246), thereafter frequently on Attic vases and one Caeretan (Acheloos 213). Later appearances are sporadic, but found throughout the Hellenistic and Roman periods. Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 73-76; Schefold/Jung, SB IV 186-188; Vollkommer 25-26.

AKTORIONE

See → Aktorione 6-10. H. kills the twin Aktorione. It is doubtful whether the episode appears on Late Geometric Boeotian fibulae (Aktorione 6-9) but Pausanias saw an encounter on the Amyklai throne (Aktorione 10) which he so identified. Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 12. Cf. 2809, 2810.

ALEOS

ALKESTIS

See → Alkestis 17-48; → Admetos I 14; → Ianitor Orchi 4. H. recovers Alkestis for Admetos from Hades. Representations are Roman, especially on sarcophagi (Alkestis 19-23) and in other funerary contexts, except for a Classical relief from Cyrene and an Apulian rf. vase (Alkestis 17, 18*). A 3rd cent. A.D. mosaic in Kos shows H. and another at feast, a sorrowful woman at the l. and a servant → Proteas; it has been thought a representation of Admetos entertaining H. but the identification must remain hypothetical: AA 1936, 175-176, 179 fig. 24. Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 22-23; Schefold/Jung, SB IV 179-181; Vollkommer 30.

ALKYONEUS

See → Alkyoneus. H. slays the sleeping giant Alkyoneus. The subject is wholly Late Archaic, on Attic vases, one Caeretan (Alkyoneus 31*) and some western reliefs (Alkyoneus I. 2, 35?). Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 68-70.

ANTAIOS

See → Antaios I. H. wrestles with the Libyan giant Antaios. A popular subject, often introduced in H. series as though one of the standard Labours. In Late Archaic scenes (mainly Attic vases) the match is on the ground; from the end of the 5th cent. the giant is lifted by H., the usual scheme in Roman art. Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 38-41; Vollkommer 22.

ANTIGONE

See → Antigone 14 (= Herakles 381). 15. H. intercedes before Kreon for Antigone and Haimon on two Apulian rf. vases. Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 77; Vollkommer 63; Schefold, SB V 85-86. For the fragment of a play on the subject (POxy 3317) see Xanthakis-Karamanos, BICS 33, 1986, 107-111.

ARETE

See → Arete I, → Eudaimonia I, → Hedone. Prodikos' famous story of the Choice of H. between Arete and Eudaimonia/Hedone seems not to have been represented in antiquity.

AUGE

See → Auge 6-24. H. rapes Auge, priestess of Athena at Tegea. She bears him → Telephos. See also LIMC IV p. 823-824 for the problem of identifying scenes of H. drawing towards him a near-naked woman. The Rogozen cup (below) seems to make the identification explicit but the inscription is strange and equivocal. Otherwise the earliest certain representation is on the Telephos frieze at Pergamon (Auge 7*) where H. is not insolent. Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 118-120; Vollkommer 31.

2797.* Gilt silver phiale. Sofia, Mus. 22304. From Rogozen. - Fol, A., et al., The New Thracian Treasure (1986) no. 4; Shefton, B. B., in The Rogozen Treasure (ed. Cook, B. F., 1989) 82-90. - Late 4th cent. B.C. - Drunken, wreathed H., seated on rocks on his lionskin, his quiver beside him, draws to him the near-naked Auge. Inscribed AYTH ΔΗΑΑΔΗ, 'Auge, indeed'.

AITHIOPE

BOREADS

BOUSIRIS

See → Bousiris. H. kills the Egyptian king Bousiris, who attempted to sacrifice him. A subject for Attic and Italiote vases, where H. is led to sacrifice (Bousiris 1-5) or routs Bousiris and his followers (Bousiris 6-28). Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 242-246; Vollkommer 22-23.

CACUS

See → Cacus. H. kills Cacus, a Roman hero, who has stolen some of the cattle of Sun which H. had brought from the west. Seen only on Roman medallions (Cacus 1, 2).

CHEIRON

A 4th cent. A.D. mosaic shows H. restraining Cheiron in the presence of Achilles; see → Achilleus 84 = Chariklo I 8* = Cheiron 95. For H.'s education by Cheiron see 1665*.

CHIMAIRA

DEXAMENOS

H. attacks a centaur Dexamenos on an Attic rf. vase (→ Dexamenos II 1 = Deianeira II 2*) in the presence of Oineus and Deianeira. Other vases on which H. attacks a centaur and where a man who might be Oineus appears might be related to the same story (Attic and Apulian vases, → Deianeira II 3-8). The inscribed Dexamenos has been thought a mistake for Eurytion (references → Dexamenos II) but an Attic vase with a centaur at feast in the presence of a seated woman, a man on the kline beside him, a wounded man, and a watching H. (→ Deianeira II 1*) could easily relate to a story of an insolent centaur Dexamenos. Cf. Schefold/Jung, SB IV 188; Vollkommer 26-28.

ECHIDNA

In Scythia H. met → Echidna, a snake-legged maiden who forced him to sleep with her and bore him three sons (Hdt. 4, 8-10; called Echidna in the Tabula Albana, FGrH 40 1a, 93-96, two sons). The encounter is not represented but one of the series of coins of Antoninus Pius at Alexandria devoted to the Labours ([Dodekathlos] 1760 with bibl.) shows H. with a snake-legged 'giantess' who has been identified as Echidna (MuM Münzlisten 263, 47). Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 122.

ERECHTHEUS/ERICHTHONIOS

On an mid-5th cent. Attic rf. vase, Paris CA 1853 (→ Aglauros, Herse, Pandrosos 24 = Erechtheus 40) H. attacks snakes on an altar with child between them, apparently an unconventional episode in the Erichthonios story.

ERGINOS

See → Erginos for H.'s defeat of the Minyan king, which is probably seen on one Roman relief, Erginos 1* (Schefold/Jung, SB IV 134 fig. 161). Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 7.

EURYSTHEUS

See → Eurystheus for the king of Mycenae for whom H. performs his Labours. Eurystheus appears in the Labour for the Erymanthian Boar (section IV, D) and with Kerberos (2616) and with Kerberos (2616) and cf. 2267. A confrontation with Eurystheus is conjectured on Roman coins:

2798.* AE, Aspendos, Severus Alexander and Gordian III. - BMC Lycia lxxvi. 105, 88 pl. 22, 9; Voegtli, Heldenepen 64-65 pl. 171. j. k; SNG v. Aulock 4595; Schefold/Jung, SB IV 136 fig. 163. - Rev.: young H. with lionskin and club stands before a man with a sceptre, seated on rocks, behind whom is a youth with spear. Above, a lion on rocks; below, a bull (zebu) - referring to Labours?

GERAS

See → Geras for 5th cent. Attic vases with H. meeting or attacking a figure generally identified as Geras. Cf. also → Alkyoneus 36*; Brommer, Herakles II 79.

HIPPOKOON

H. kills Hippokoon and his sons, to restore Tyn-dareos to the Spartan throne (Diod. 4, 33, 5-6; Apollod. bibl. 2 [143-145] 7, 3). A Tegea there was a statue of H. showing the thigh wound he sustained in the battle (Paus. 8, 53, 9). Paus. 3, 18, 11 has been interpreted to indicate that the scene appeared on the Throne of Apollo at Amyklai (cf. Robert, C., RE III 1, 130 s. v. «Bathykles»; Pipili, Lac 81), and a Laconian bf. cup showing a man slaying two others, with two dead, has been associated with the scene (Hamburg 1983, 281; ibid. 10-11 fig. 15) but the attacker is not characterised as H. and is elaborately dressed. Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 80.

KENTAUROI

See →Cheiron (and above); →Dexamenos II and →Deianeira II (and above). H. riding or carrying a centaur (1580. 1581*. 1582), on a centaur-chariot (1428*-1435).

For the encounter with Nessos in which he rescues Deianeira see →Nessos; the subject appears first on Attic vases from the mid-7th cent. on, then Corinthian and other Archaic wares. It regains popularity in the Roman period.

For the encounter with Pholos leading to H.'s major centauromachy see →Kentauroi; the subject appears first on Corinthian 7th-cent. vases, then on many Attic from about 550 B.C. and other Archaic wares; it is very rare later.

Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 48-59; Vollkommer 28-29.

KERKOPES

See →Kerkops, Kerkopes. H. is shown carrying the captured Kerkopes from a pole over his shoulder from the early 6th cent. on in various media of Archaic art, surviving on Attic and Italiote vases to the 4th cent. For H. possibly pursuing Kerkopes see 2809. Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 28-32; Vollkommer 24-25.

KYKNOS

See →Kyknos I, →Ares. H. attacks the son of Ares and kills him, then attacks Ares himself. Many representations on Attic vases from about 560 B.C. and on some other Archaic wares and media. It seems then to be ignored except for occasional scenes in the Roman period. Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 81-83; Vollkommer 29-30.

LAODAMEIA

Wife of →Protesilaos, the first Greek to die at Troy. She was allowed to see him again for a short while, and when he «dies» a second time she dies with him. On the Roman stucco relief (below) H. is the intermediary at the meeting, not Hermes as in the literary sources (Apollod. epitome 3, 30; Ov. her. 13; Serv. Aen. 6, 447; Hyg. fab. 103, 104).

2799. (= Hades/Pluto 70) Stucco relief. Ostia, Isola Sacra, tomb of P. Aelius Maximus. - Calza, NotSc 1928, 153 figs. 14, 15; Mielsch, Stuckreliefs 161 K 90 pl. 75, 2. - A.D. 120-130. - H. with lionskin leads Laodameia from an arched entrance towards a seated Plouton, who extends a hand, and Protesilaos. All figures named.

LEPREOS

Scenes of H. with amphorae have been associated, probably wrongly, with H.'s contest with →Lepreos in discus-throwing, water-drawing and eating; see 1324*. 1325* and Commentary. Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 13.

LYKAON

Lykaon, son of Ares and Pyrene, met H. on his way to the Hesperides, challenged him and was killed. Eur. Alc. 501-502 refers and the Etym. gen. p. 258 Miller s. v. «Pyrene» gives the fuller story (for which see Robert, Heldensage 512) which appears also in Apollod. bibl. 2 (114) 5, 11, where the opponent is called Kyknos, another son of Ares. There is one very uncertain representation:

2800. (= 17*) Neck amphora, Attic rf. Dresden, Staatl. Kunstslg. Dr. 288. From Nola. - ARV 19; Gerhard, AVpl. 124; Brommer, Herakles II 20 n. 71. - 510-500 B.C. - A: H. fully armed with club and bow attacking, on B: a warrior with spear, falling back. Inscriptions: A: ΑΘΕΤΕ ΕΝΟΧΕΕ; B: ΝΟΑΧ. Those by H. seem nonsense but by his opponent's head Robert restores Lykaon. The scheme is as for Kyknos (it could hardly be otherwise) and Beazley takes the opponent for Kyknos. It is just possible that the inscriptions are garbled, barely literate, attempts at «Herakles» and «Lykaon», since they do not present the pattern of usual nonsense.

NEREUS/HALIOS GERON

See →Halios Geron; →Nereus. H. wrestles with the sea god, with fishy body, in minor arts from the 6th cent. on. On Attic vases Nereus acquires a fully human body (see below, Triton) before 550 B.C. and the scene continues to appear for nearly a century. There are Late Archaic Attic rf. vases showing H. destroying Nereus' palace. Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 105, 111-113; Ahlberg, G., Herakles and the Sea-Monster in Attic Black-Figure Vase-Painting (1984).

OMPHALE

See →Omphale. H. served the Lydian queen and exchanged dress and roles with her. The subject is popular in the Hellenistic and Roman periods, showing the exchanged dress and H. spinning. Omphale often appears alone or without H., but not certainly in the Archaic or Classical periods. See 1524*. 1525. 1558*. Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 126-128 (pl. 48 shows Artemis, not Omphale, cf. Vollkommer, R., Ann. d'Hist. d'Art et d'Arch. de l'Univ. Libre de Bruxelles 10, 1988, 27-37 fig. 1); Vollkommer 31-32.

PELIOU ATHLA

H.'s role as an Argonaut secures his attendance at the Games where he may appear in art as spectator, judge or victor.

2801. Relief on the Chest of Kypselos at Olympia. Lost. - Paus. 5, 17, 9. - Mid-6th cent. B.C. - «H. is seated on a throne, his wife behind him - the inscription naming her is missing but she plays Phrygian, not Greek aulos.» They are watching the chariot-racing. Paus. may have mistaken the sex of the piper, and his «Phrygian aulos» was possibly a trumpet.

2803.* (= Amykos 14* [part], = Argonautai 22, Atalante 73* [part], = Hippomenes 1) Volute crater frs., Attic rf. Ferrara, Mus. Naz. 2865 (T 404). From Spina. - ARV 1039, 9: Peleus P.; Beazley, J. D., AJA 64, 1960, pl. 53, 3. - 440-430 B.C. - The frs. show various athletic events involving Argonauts, apparently at the Games for Pelias. One fr. has a naked hero before a tripod, raising his hand. Arias suggested H. and Beazley seems to agree: «he is dedicating the tripod he has won in the games».

PROMETHEUS

See →Prometheus. H. frees Prometheus and kills the eagle sent by Zeus daily to torment the Titan. The subject begins to appear on Attic vases at the end of the 7th cent. B.C. and continues for nearly a century, also in Peloponnesian minor arts (but without H.). It recurs on Italiote vases with a theatrical setting, rarely later. Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 84-88.

PYGMAIOI

BIBLIOGRAPHY: Brommer, Herakles II 47; Mourat, R., RNum 1900, 423-428; Robert, Heldensage 516-517; Waser, O., ML III 2 (1902-09) 3304-3306 s. v. «Pygmaien»; idem, RE XXIII 2 (1959) 2073 s. v. «Pygmaien»; Voegtli, Heldenepen 82-84.

2804. Painting described in Philostr. im. 2, 22. - The pygmies attack sleeping H. (Hypnos stands over him, Antaios lies dead). H. stands up, laughs, gathers the pygmies into his lionskin to take to Eurystheus.

The picture in 2804 represents an episode with which 2805 might be related, though in it the attack seems playful, but on neither 2805 nor 2806 are pyg-

mies certainly shown. The subject is related to that of H. being robbed by satyrs (3230-3238).

SKYTHES

2807.* Calyx crater, Apulian rf. Basel, Antikenmus. S 34. - RVAp II 501, 64: Darius P.; Schmidt, M., et al., Eine Gruppe apulischer Grabvasen in Basel (1976) 94-108 pls. 23, 25; Schefold/Jung, SB IV 219 fig. 269; Vollkommer 65 fig. 86. - 340-330 B.C. - Skythes enthroned with sceptre at the l., behind him a youth with spear. Before him stand →Rhodope holding a tablet, H. with lionskin, club and quiver, Antiope (= Amazones 782*) and the child Hippolytos (= Hippolytos I 7). All figures named. In the upper register Pan, Apollo (= Apollon 941), Artemis seated on an altar beside a statue on a pillar (= Artemis 1391*), Aphrodite and Eros.

Skythes was a son of H. by →Echidna (see above) and is here shown as king. Rhodope was the nymph of a Thracian spring, loved by Apollo. H. appears to intercede in a judgement offered by Skythes involving Rhodope (who had incurred the wrath of Artemis) and Antiope with her child Hippolytos. See also →Hippolytos I; →Rhodope; →Skythes. Schmidt, l. c., discusses the possible mythological and theatrical interpretation of the whole scene.

SYLEUS

See →Syleus. H., set to work in Syleus' vineyard, proceeds to destroy it and Syleus' house and property. 5th-cent. Attic vases show the scene. See Brommer, Herakles II 34-36.

TEUTAROS

H. was taught to shoot by the Scythian Teutaros (Lykophron 56; Kall. fig. 692 Pf.). This is probably the scene on the relief, Vatican 796 (→Athena/Minerva 375*; Schefold/Jung, SB IV 134 fig. 161). Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 4-5.

THEIODAMAS

→Theiodamas, Dryopian king and father of →Hylas, refused food to H. and →Hyllos. H. seized one of his oxen and killed Theiodamas (Apollod. bibl. 2 [153] 7, 7; Apoll. Rhod. 1, 1211-1219 with Schol.; Kall. h. 3, 160-161; Robert, Heldensagen 533-534).

2808. Painting described in Philostr. im. 2, 24; H. contemplates the ox while Theiodamas pursues him with stones.

TRITON

See →Triton; →Nereus (also above). There is no literary source. On many Attic vases of about 560-460 B.C. (and rarely elsewhere) H. fights Triton in a scheme adapted from that for H. and Nereus as a fishy god. Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 90-92, but, for the Corinthian example which shows Nereus, see Boardman, J., Festschr. N. Himmelmann (1989) 193.

TYPHON

See →Typhon. Eur. Herc. 1271-1272 has H. kill the three-bodied Typhon. Some scholars have so

KENTAUROI

See →Cheiron (and above); →Dexamenos II and →Deianeira II (and above). H. riding or carrying a centaur (1580. 1581*. 1582), on a centaur-chariot (1428*-1435).

For the encounter with Nessos in which he rescues Deianeira see →Nessos; the subject appears first on Attic vases from the mid-7th cent. on, then Corinthian and other Archaic wares. It regains popularity in the Roman period.

For the encounter with Pholos leading to H.'s major centauromachy see →Kentauroi; the subject appears first on Corinthian 7th-cent. vases, then on many Attic from about 550 B.C. and other Archaic wares; it is very rare later.

Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 48-59; Vollkommer 28-29.

KERKOPES

See →Kerkops, Kerkopes. H. is shown carrying the captured Kerkopes from a pole over his shoulder from the early 6th cent. on in various media of Archaic art, surviving on Attic and Italiote vases to the 4th cent. For H. possibly pursuing Kerkopes see 2809. Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 28-32; Vollkommer 24-25.

KYKNOS

See →Kyknos I, →Ares. H. attacks the son of Ares and kills him, then attacks Ares himself. Many representations on Attic vases from about 560 B.C. and on some other Archaic wares and media. It seems then to be ignored except for occasional scenes in the Roman period. Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 81-83; Vollkommer 29-30.

LAODAMEIA

Wife of →Protesilaos, the first Greek to die at Troy. She was allowed to see him again for a short while, and when he «dies» a second time she dies with him. On the Roman stucco relief (below) H. is the intermediary at the meeting, not Hermes as in the literary sources (Apollod. epitome 3, 30; Ov. her. 13; Serv. Aen. 6, 447; Hyg. fab. 103, 104).

2799. (= Hades/Pluto 70) Stucco relief. Ostia, Isola Sacra, tomb of P. Aelius Maximus. - Calza, NotSc 1928, 153 figs. 14, 15; Mielsch, Stuckreliefs 161 K 90 pl. 75, 2. - A.D. 120-130. - H. with lionskin leads Laodameia from an arched entrance towards a seated Plouton, who extends a hand, and Protesilaos. All figures named.

LEPREOS

LYKAON

Lykaon, son of Ares and Pyrene, met H. on his way to the Hesperides, challenged him and was killed. Eur. Alc. 501-502 refers and the Etyim. gen. p. 258 Miller s.v. «Pyrene» gives the fuller story (for which see Robert, Heldensage 512) which appears also in Apollod. bibl. 2 (114) 5, 11, where the opponent is called Kyknos, another son of Ares. There is one very uncertain representation:

2800. (= 17*) Neck amphora, Attic rf. Dresden, Staatl. Kunstslg. Dr. 288. From Nola. - ARV 19; Gerhard, AVpl. 124; Brommer, Herakles II 20 n. 71. - 510-500 B.C. - A: H. fully armed with club and bow attacking, on B: a warrior with spear, falling back. Inscriptions: A: ΑΘΕΤΕ ΕΝΟΧΕΕ; B: ΝΟΑΧ. Those by H. seem nonsense but by his opponent's head Robert restores Lykaon. The scheme is as for Kyknos (it could hardly be otherwise) and Beazley takes the opponent for Kyknos. It is just possible that the inscriptions are garbled, barely literate, attempts at «Herakles» and «Lykaon», since they do not present the pattern of usual nonsense.

NEREUS/HALIOS GERON

See →Halios Geron; →Nereus. H. wrestles with the sea god, with fishy body, in minor arts from the 6th cent. on. On Attic vases Nereus acquires a fully human body (see below, Triton) before 550 B.C. and the scene continues to appear for nearly a century. There are Late Archaic Attic rf. vases showing H. destroying Nereus' palace. Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 105. 111-113; Ahlberg, G., Herakles and the Sea-Monster in Attic Black-Figure Vase-Painting (1984).

OMPHALE

See →Omphale. H. served the Lydian queen and exchanged dress and roles with her. The subject is popular in the Hellenistic and Roman periods, showing the exchanged dress and H. spinning. Omphale often appears alone or without H., but not certainly in the Archaic or Classical periods. See 1524*. 1525. 1558*. Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 126-128 (pl. 48 shows Artemis, not Omphale, cf. Vollkommer, R., Ann. d'Hist. d'Art et d'Arch. de l'Univ. Libre de Bruxelles 10, 1988, 27-37 fig. 1); Vollkommer 31-32.

PELIOU ATHLA

H.'s role as an Argonaut secures his attendance at the Games where he may appear in art as spectator, judge or victor.

2801. Relief on the Chest of Kypselos at Olympia. Lost. - Paus. 5, 17, 9. - Mid-6th cent. B.C. - «H. is seated on a throne, his wife behind him - the inscription naming her is missing but she plays Phrygian, not Greek aulos.» They are watching the chariot-racing. Paus. may have mistaken the sex of the piper, and his «Phrygian aulos» was possibly a trumpet.

2803.* (= Amykos 14* [part], = Argonautai 22, Atalante 73* [part], = Hippomenes 1) Volute crater frs., Attic rf. Ferrara, Mus. Naz. 2865 (T 404). From Spina. - ARV 1039, 9: Peleus P.; Beazley, J. D., AJA 64, 1960, pl. 53, 3. - 440-430 B.C. - The frs. show various athletic events involving Argonauts, apparently at the Games for Pelias. One fr. has a naked hero before a tripod, raising his hand. Arias suggested H. and Beazley seems to agree: «he is dedicating the tripod he has won in the games».

PROMETHEUS

See →Prometheus. H. frees Prometheus and kills the eagle sent by Zeus daily to torment the Titan. The subject begins to appear on Attic vases at the end of the 7th cent. B.C. and continues for nearly a century, also in Peloponnesian minor arts (but without H.). It recurs on Italiote vases with a theatrical setting, rarely later. Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 84-88.

PYGMAIOI

Pygmies pester H. after his encounter with →Antaios (I) (briefly alluded to in Amm. 22, 12, 4).

BIBLIOGRAPHY: Brommer, Herakles II 47; Mourat, R., RNum 1900, 423-428; Robert, Heldensage 516-517; Waser, O., ML III 2 (1902-09) 3304-3306 s.v. «Pygmaien»; idem, RE XXIII 2 (1959) 2073 s.v. «Pygmaien»; Voegtli, Heldenepen 82-84.

2804. Painting described in Philostr. im. 2, 22. - The pygmies attack sleeping H. (Hypnos stands over him, Antaios lies dead). H. stands up, laughs, gathers the pygmies into his lionskin to take to Eurystheus.

The picture in 2804 represents an episode with which 2805 might be related, though in it the attack seems playful, but on neither 2805 nor 2806 are pyg-

SKYTHES

2807.* Calyx crater, Apulian rf. Basel, Antikenmus. S 34. - RVAp II 501, 64: Darius P.; Schmidt, M., et al., Eine Gruppe apulischer Grabvasen in Basel (1976) 94-108 pls. 23, 25; Schefold/Jung, SB IV 219 fig. 269; Vollkommer 65 fig. 86. - 340-330 B.C. - Skythes enthroned with sceptre at the l., behind him a youth with spear. Before him stand →Rhodope holding a tablet, H. with lionskin, club and quiver, Antiope (= Amazones 782*) and the child Hippolytos (= Hippolytos I 7). All figures named. In the upper register Pan, Apollo (= Apollon 941), Artemis seated on an altar beside a statue on a pillar (= Artemis 1391*), Aphrodite and Eros.

Skythes was a son of H. by →Echidna (see above) and is here shown as king. Rhodope was the nymph of a Thracian spring, loved by Apollo. H. appears to intercede in a judgement offered by Skythes involving Rhodope (who had incurred the wrath of Artemis) and Antiope with her child Hippolytos. See also →Hippolytos I; →Rhodope; →Skythes. Schmidt, l.c., discusses the possible mythological and theatrical interpretation of the whole scene.

SYLEUS

See →Syleus. H., set to work in Syleus' vineyard, proceeds to destroy it and Syleus' house and property. 5th-cent. Attic vases show the scene. See Brommer, Herakles II 34-36.

TEUTAROS

H. was taught to shoot by the Scythian Teutaros (Lykophron 56; Kall. frg. 692 Pf.). This is probably the scene on the relief, Vatican 796 (→Athena/Minerva 375*; Schefold/Jung, SB IV 134 fig. 161). Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 4-5.

THEIODAMAS

→Theiodamas, Dryopian king and father of →Hylas, refused food to H. and →Hyllos. H. seized one of his oxen and killed Theiodamas (Apollod. bibl. 2 [153] 7, 7; Apoll. Rhod. 1, 1211-1219 with Schol.; Kall. h. 3, 160-161; Robert, Heldensagen 533-534).

2808. Painting described in Philostr. im. 2, 24; H. contemplates the ox while Theiodamas pursues him with stones.

TRITON

See →Triton; →Nereus (also above). There is no literary source. On many Attic vases of about 560-460 B.C. (and rarely elsewhere) H. fights Triton in a scheme adapted from that for H. and Nereus as a fishy god. Cf. Brommer, Herakles II 90-92, but, for the Corinthian example which shows Nereus, see Boardman, J., Festschr. N. Himmelmann (1989) 193.

TYPHON

See →Typhon. Eur. Herc. 1271-1272 has H. kill the three-bodied Typhon. Some scholars have so identified the creature in the pediment of the Archaic Athena temple on the Athens Acropolis, which seems not to be attacked: see Brommer, Herakles II 71.

A. Herakles attacks men or youths (anonymous)

CATALOGUE

2809. (= Aktorione 17) Amphora, Attic bf. Paris, Cab. Méd. 174. – ABV 315, 2: P. of Würzburg 252; CVA I pl. 33 (317), 3. 4. 6; Schefold, SB II 135 fig. 175. – About 540 B.C. – A: H., in lionskin over tunic, with raised club and with a sword and bow at either side of him in the field, pursues to the r. a hairy man, holding a club, who looks back. Athena encourages H. and behind her, another hairy man runs away l., looking back. Schefold suggests H. and the Molione; Beazley suggests → Kerkopes. Both solutions are rejected by Hampe (→ Aktorione 17), but either is possible. (B: Theseus and bull, = Aigeus 2*.)

2810. Amphora fr., Attic bf. Florence, Mus. Arch. – ABV 368, 100: Leagros Group. – 510–500 B.C. – H. attacks r. with club, before him a woman in polos faces r., the raised arms of a man, part of an entablature.

2813.* Marble relief dedicated by the strategos and phylarchs at Kyzikos. Istanbul, Mus. 564. – Mendel, Sculpt. no. 858; Picard, C., BCH 56, 1932, pl. 25; Launey, M., REA 46, 1944, 219–226 fig. 1; Süßenbach, U., Der Frühhellenismus im gr. Kampf-Relief (1971) 47–50 figs. 1. 2. – 277/6 B.C. – H. naked with raised club attacks a collapsing warrior in trousered Celtic (Galatian) dress, holding a sword, his oval shield to the r., with H.'s lionskin hanging from a tree above it. The relief celebrates the city's appeal to H. when threatened by the Galatians under Loutarios. J. N. Mordtmann (AM 10, 1985, 200) sees here H. fighting the king → Kyzikos.

2814.* Quartz scarab, Greco-Phoenician, Péronne, Danicourt Coll. – Boardman, J., RA 1971, 197–198 fig. 4. – About 500 B.C. – Young H., wearing lionskin, its head hanging behind him, attacks with club and bow a small warrior (helmet, tunic, spear, shield) who crouches before him, turning away. Very similar, in green jasper, is the scarab Baltimore, WAG 42. 158.

2815.* Cornelian scarab, Greco-Phoenician or Cypriot. Boston, MFA 98.729. – Furtwängler, AG pl. 6, 58; Boardman, o.c. 2814, 198 n. 1. – About 500 B.C. – H., with lionskin, tunic and quiver, attacks with club and bow a small naked man who raises his hands in supplication.

2816. Sardonyx intaglio. Berlin (DDR), Staatl. Mus. FG 6863. – Furtwängler, Beschreibung pl. 50. – 1st cent. B.C. – Young H. (?) raises his club to attack a second figure (described by Furtwängler as a barbarian) before a palladion.

2819. Vacat.

COMMENTARY

The Archaic pairs attacked (2809. 2811) call to mind Aktorione or Kerkopes, but only the hairy 2809 might qualify as the latter. (There are no grounds for seeing H. on the shieldband fr. from Perachora, → Aktorione 19.) The quarry on 2812 is generally taken for Alkyoneus, but only his sleepiness fits the identification. He is not monstrous, has no club, and is dressed, while H. is not threatening and might as easily be taken to be succouring or visiting. Moreover, the domestic or palatial or temple setting is inappropriate, and the same artist also depicts a certain Alkyoneus (inscribed) in the traditional way (→ Alkyoneus 3*). So this may be another of the Priam P.'s original H. stories (cf. 1423*).

2812a may involve one of H.'s cupboys whom he killed (cf. Robert, Heldensage<sup>4</sup> 576–577).

On the Greco-Phoenician scarabs the schemes of attack are eastern and no Greek identity for the victim – a warrior (2814) and a naked man (2815) need be sought. 2818 is a fine Classical piece, with the attacked youth completely naked and unarmed. On 2816 the attacking figure may not be H. and the presence of a palladion should provide a clue, but does not. On the relief with H. fighting a Celt (Galatian) H. symbolises triumph over the invading barbarian (2813).

No doubt all the scenes, except perhaps 2815 and 2816, were specific events, but so far we lack the iconographic evidence for identification.

B. Herakles fights a snake

H. encountered a snake guarding the tree of the Hesperides; the serpentoid Hydra; the snake-related Kerberos; a snake in Lydia. One of Periklymenos' mutations was a snake and H. had a general reputation for having rid the earth of monsters. A snake emerges from Hades' palace on 2562. 2563. 2565.

LITERARY SOURCES: Hekataios (FGH I F 27) has Kerberos as a poisonous snake, brought to light by H. at Tainaron and presented to Eurystheus. For Periklymenos as snake see Hes. fig. 33(a), 17 Merkelbach/West and Apollod. bibl. I (93) 9, 9. For a man-eating snake killed by H. by the river Sagaris in Lydia (sic; really the Sangarios in Phrygia) see Hyg. astr. 2, 14, a story sometimes attributed to Panyassis (Davies EGF F dub. 5: see Matthews, V. J., Panyassis of Halikarnassos [1974] 144–145).

2830. Two stone relief bases for statues (of H.). Alzey Mus. From Alzey. – CSIR II 1, nos. 18. 19; Schauenburg 2, 99. – A.D. 220–230. – Each base carries four reliefs: Juno, H. with Kerberos (= 2632. 2633), H. with snake at tree of Hesperides (cf. 2752), and, on no. 18: young H. raises his club to a snake which he seizes; on no. 19: the same, but the pose is less animated and H. wears a lionskin or cloak.

2831.* Clay lamp (Broneer Type XXII). Copenhagen, Nat. Mus. ABc 368. From Mysia or Makluba. – 1st cent. A.D. – H. wearing lionskin raises his club to a snake which he seizes. It has its coils round his l. ankle.

UNCERTAIN

2832. Nicolo intaglio fr. Copenhagen, Thorv. Mus. 1750. – Fossing, ThorvGems pl. 20. – 1st cent. B.C. – The legs and club of H.(?) holding a snake (?). The celestial ophiouchos (? Fossing).

2833. (= Kadmos I 31a*) AE coin, Tyre, Gordian III. – Servais-Soyez, B., in Atti I. Congr. Stud. Fenici e Punici (1983) I 259–265 pl. 63, 3 = BMC Phoenicia 280, 425 pl. 33, 12. – A naked man advances on a snake, a stone in his raised r. hand, a club (?) in his l. The type is as that for Kadmos' attack in the same series (ibid. pl. 63, 1. 2; → Kadmos I 31). The club is not certain and it is oddly held. Servais-Soyez suggests a conflation of the Kadmos scheme with H./Melkart.

COMMENTARY

On 2820 there is no certainty that the attacker is H. and although the man-serpent recalls the Periklymenos story, it is most unlikely to refer to it. On 2822 Schauenburg sees the Hydra but the same artist uses the scheme elsewhere for a fight with a conventional many-headed Hydra (Paris, Louvre E 851; ABV 97, 24; CVA I pls. 5 [35], 5; 7 [37], 4) and is probably unlikely to have shown the beast in two different ways, so this is meant for a different, if unidentified, encounter. The episode on 2823 remains unexplained. Boardman (o.c.) took the girl and the fountain house – a theme very common in the painter's work – to indicate an Athenian setting for an act ridding a place of malign presences (including the small lion). Beazley (CVA Oxford 2 p. 100) wondered if the snake were of the Hesperides (followed by Moon, o.c.) but nothing else signals this story in the scene.

In the other Greek and Roman scenes the possibility that an abbreviated Hydra is shown cannot be excluded, but this seems less likely with the Archaic – note the wearing of a corselet on both 2821 and 2827. 2826 may show Ladon since other Phaistos coins (2699) have the Hesperides tree. The Hydra scheme for a snake-fight, and a helper (as Iolaos) with the «H.» a warrior with helmet and corselet, appears on the strange bf. amphora Louvre E 707 (Schauenburg 1, 174 figs. 20, 21; 2, 100–101). The latter's dress, with animal skin (not lionskin) below corselet, is not Heraklean though the club might be borrowed from the H. scenes for another. Schauenburg takes the vase for Etruscan but its dipinto suggests a Greek source (Johnston, A. W., Trademarks [1979] 87, 192), perhaps E. Greek (cf. Boardman apud Schauenburg 2, 100). The snake features of Kerberos are often apparent on the dog's anatomy but on Boulogne 68 (ABV 385, 2) a whole snake is beside the dog, facing H., recalling Hekataios' version of the story (Lit. Sources). H. grapples an Erichthonios snake on a mid 5th cent. Attic vase (→ Erechtheus 40 and see above section VI). For his adventure in the cradle see Section III A.

C. Herakles fights various other animals

Several Labours involve animals of natural appearance but supernatural character (lion, deer, horses, bull, boar, birds, snake). He also captures the divine horse → Areion ([Hes.] sc. 120; Paus. 8, 25, 10; Brommer, Herakles II 78; cf. 2879 where Areion is one of H.'s chariot horses in an apotheosis procession); he is annoyed by cicadas between Rhegion and Locri on his return from Geryoneus and disperses them by prayer (Diod. 4, 22, 5); his opponent Periklymenos could turn himself into an eagle, ant, swarm of bees, fly or lion; H. can ward off plagues of cicadas and the worms that attack vines (Strabon 13, 1, 64 p. 613); pestered by flies at Olympia he drove them away by sacrificing to Zeus Apomyios (Paus. 5, 14, 1). None of these encounters is certainly recognised in art.

D. Herakles fights various other land monsters

H.'s Labours and other episodes present him with creatures of monstrous character (Hydra, Kerberos, centaurs). There are references to a few others in literature: three-bodied Typhon (Eur. Herc. 1271–1272). See also Section VI, Echidna. The scenes listed here do not readily relate to any of these.

2834.* Oinochoe. Boston, MFA 98.924. From near Thebes. – ABV 524, 1: Athena P., Sèvres Class; Vermeule pl. 80, 1, 2; Tiverios pl. 39a; Reho fig. 7. – About 500 B.C. – H. in lionskin swinging his club leads by a rope around her neck a quadruped with hairy body, belly dugs, a human breast, a dog's tail, a woman's head (long hair with fillet) breathing fire.

2837.* Skyphos. Copenhagen, NM 834. – CVA 3 pl. 119 (121), 8; Vermeule pl. 80, 4; Reho fig. 5; Tiverios pl. 39b. – About 500 B.C. – Young H.(?) naked, with club, drags by a leash a monster from a cave. The monster's head only appears, with protruding tongue, of uncertain sex but with a whiskery chin.

COMMENTARY

The scenes are all Attic of about 500 B.C. The monster is female (not certain on 2837), with open mouth (fire on 2834), dugs (2834–2836), dog's tail and legs but upturned claws on 2835 (like a bear). It seems unresistant. (The breasty sphinx confronting a hairy woman on Berlin F 1934 [ABV 528, 44; Vermeule pl. 80, 3; Reho fig. 8] is from the Athena P.'s workshop but not close physically to H.'s monster, although often compared.) She has been considered a deviant Hydra (Tiverios) or related to Lamia (well discussed by Vermeule and Reho), Kerberos or other infernal monster, or sphinx. Non-human aspects tell against a sphinx; Lamia is never described as such a monster, nor has to do with H. and Hydra is always differently composed. The dog-elements and scheme with leash or chain clearly relate to Kerberos, yet this is not the dog of Hades but a female counterpart of unknown (to us, or perhaps anyone) identity, living for a brief period in the imaginations of artists in an Athenian pottery.

CATALOGUE

See Boardman, J., in Festschr. N. Himmelmann (1989) 191–192 for discussion of these scenes.

2844. Hydria, Caeretan bf. Künacht (Switzerland), Hirschmann Coll. – Isler, H. P., in Slg. Hirschmann (1982) 24–25, 95–96 no. 10; idem, JdI 98, 1983, 19–23 figs. 1, 3, 5, 6; Hemelrijk, J. M., Caeretan Hydriae (1984) 45–46, 14–142 pls. 103, 104: Eagle P. – About 510 B.C. – A naked man with harpe and stone attacks a ketos; dolphins, octopus, seal. Isler argues for Perseus (defending Andromeda) rather than H. (defending Hesione). Hemelrijk suggests an otherwise unknown story, with an unnamed hero (not H.) involving the Phokaia/seal.

2846. (= [Dodekathlos] 1712* with bibl.) Marble frieze. Delphi Mus. From the Theatre. – AJA 82, 1978, 229 fig. 4. – 2nd/1st cent. B.C. or later. – H. swings his club at a rearing, coiled ketos which he seizes by the neck.

COMMENTARY

Unless Hemelrijk is right in seeing on 2844 an unknown myth with an unknown hero, the lack of an Andromeda or Hesione tells against specific stories of Perseus or H. Hemelrijk argues that the hero's appearance does not precisely match that of other H.'s in Caeretan, but the Hesione episode (up-coast from the painter's original home) or a generic attack on a sea-monster by H. seem likely explanations. He has no attributes of Perseus (as Isler) and H. can use stones or harpe against such creatures. The «Triton» on 2845 is too far removed in time and place to be the Triton fought by H. on Archaic Attic vases and cannot be Nereus, so could be a generic denizen of the seas. The physique recalls Skylla. The scene on 2846 is generally taken for the episode with Hesione but she is omitted, and there would have been room for her on a frieze where the artist allows two groups with H. for the Diomedes episode (1712; H. with the horse, and H. with the king), so the monster might here also be generic rather than specific to a story. The scheme is that for H. with a snake, with the ketos slim, rearing and legless, rather than the usual fight with a ketos.

2. Three winged youths

2838. (= Boreadai 49*) Hydria, Lucanian rf. Winterthur 368. – LCS 145, 792 pl. 67, 4: P. of Naples 1959; Volkommer 22 no. 163, 1. About 350 B.C. – Young H. with club and lionskin pursues three winged youths. On the Tabula Albana (FGH 40 F 1a, 89–93) H. is said to have thrown into the sea two Boreads, Zetes and Kalais. See Brommer, Herakles II 78.

3. A small winged man

See → Geras 7; Schefold/Jung, SBIV 174 fig. 212.

4. Monster-bird

2839. (= 2266*) Bell crater, Apulian rf. Kiel, Kunsthalle B 537. – 380–360 B.C. – Young H., naked, his quiver and lionskin behind him, draws his bow at a monster-bird with fishlike head and crest, round body, raised wing, long claws. Athena is seated above the bird. Schauenburg discusses the difficulty of taking this for a Stymphalian bird – its monstrous appearance, its singularity and the fact that it is grounded.

5. Griffin

2840.* Cup, Boeotian bf. London, BM 1931.2–16.22. – Brommer, Herakles II 146. – Late 5th cent. B.C. – Crude silhouette style. A man with club and cloak over l. arm (H.?) attacks a griffin.

2841. (= [Dodekathlos] 1726*) Marble pilaster relief. Leptis Magna, Basilica. – Floriani Squarciapino, o.c. 1726, 144–145 pl. 52, 3; eadem, ArchCl 10, 1958, 112 pl. 36. – Severan. – Naked H. wrestles with a creature with lion's body, wings, mane, horn (?).

6. Snake-legged man

2842. (= Acheloos 277 with bibl.). Bronze group. Rabat, Arch. Mus. From Volubilis. – 1st/2nd cent. A.D. – H. (only hand, foot and part of lionskin) fights a snake-legged man, certainly not Acheloos.

Cf. also → Acheloos 275 (wall painting at Ephesus) where the hero is not certainly H., and the fight is in the presence of a kneeling youth and a woman.

7. Hare-headed winged man

2843.* Gold ring, E. Greek. Paris, Louvre Bj. 1058. – Boardman, J., AntK 10, 1967, L6 pl. 6; GGFR 157 fig. 199. – About 500 B.C. – H. in lionskin with raised club pursues a hare-headed winged man. For such monsters in E. Greek art see Boardman, AntK 10, 1967, 23 and AGGems 105.

E. Herakles fights a sea monster

H. may fight a man fish, → Halios Geron, → Nereus or → Triton, and confronts a → Ketos when he rescues → Hesione. He had also a reputation for having cleared the sea of monsters: Pind. N. 3, 23–25; Eur. Herc. 400–402 (see Bond's commentary ad loc. [p. 168] for discussion and other allusions). He fought → Skylla (I) on his return from Geryoneus (Lykophron 44–49, 651).

VIII. Herakles' death and apotheosis

→ Deianeira despatched the robe, poisoned by Nessos' blood, to H. at Oichalia. It was presented to him by Lichas while he sacrificed at Mt Kenaion. In agony from the burning robe H. goes to Mt Oita where he builds a pyre, or persuades his children to build a pyre. He then persuades → Philoktetes (or his father Poias) to light the pyre and rewards him with his bow and arrows. The river Douras or nymphs douse the flames which consume H.'s mortal parts while the hero, rejuvenated, rises to heaven in a chariot driven by Nike or Athena. Archaic scenes of a chariot procession to Olympus with Athena as charioteer, and H.'s introduction to Zeus by Athena, may be independent of the story of the pyre. H.'s immortality may also be regarded as a reward for his role in the battle of gods and giants, or recognition of his acquisition of the Hesperides' apples (of immortality) and his defeat of Hades (in seizing Kerberos). For Deianeira and the robe see 1680. For Lichas and the sacrifice at Mt Kenasion see section II c.

LITERARY SOURCES: In Homer (Il. 18, 117–119) H. is a mortal hero who dies, defeated by μῆτις and Hera's jealousy, and descends to Hades (Od. 11, 601–602). The immediately following lines in the Od., placing him on Olympus with Hebe (602–604) were claimed to be later additions even in antiquity. In post-Hesiodic lines of the Theogony (950–955; see West's edition and comm. pp. 416–417) he lives on Olympus, and is similarly treated as a god in the 6th cent. compilation of the ehoiai (frg. 25, 26–33; 229, 6–13; cf. 1, 22 Merkelbach/West). Yet the same poem (frg. 25, 20–25) tells how Deianeira gave Lichas the poisoned robe for H., and states that he died and went to Hades. Apotheosis is not then attested before the 6th cent. (when it appears also in art). Pindar knows H. as a god in Olympus (N. 1, 69–72; 10, 17–18; I. 4, 55–60) and it is of course a commonplace in literature thereafter. Eur. can think of H. going to Hades and being worshipped as a hero (Herc. 1331–1333) or avoiding Hades and the funeral pyre by going to heaven (Heraclidae 912–916). The fullest account of the pyre is Apollod. bibl. 2 (159–160) 7, 7: H. in agony from the poisoned robe goes to Mt. Oita, makes a pyre, persuades Poias to light it and rewards him with his bow. A passing thundercloud lifts him to heaven. In Diod. 4, 38, 4–5, Iolaos builds the pyre, Philoktetes lights it and receives the bow, lightning falls and consumes the pyre leaving not a single bone. (See also Sen. Herc. O. 1483–1487, 1603–1606; Serv. Aen. 8, 299.) A papyrus frg. ascribed to Aeschylus' Herakleidae has been interpreted as referring to H.'s pyre, erected for the suffering hero by various of his children (TrGF III F 73b). The first clear reference to H.'s pyre is in Soph. Trach. 1193–1202 (date unknown, but earlier than Phil.) where Hyllos is enjoined to build it, and Soph. Phil. (409 B.C.) where (1409–1440) the role of Philoktetes with H.'s bow in securing the sack of Troy is foretold. It is probably the fiery character of the robe that is referred to by Bakchylides (dith. 16, 13–16; cf. Soph. Trach. 680–704) and not the pyre. The burning H. threw himself into a nearby river, thereby generating the hot springs of Thermopylai (Schol. Lykophron 50–51; Westermann, Myth. Gr., App. narr. 28, 8). H.'s children decline to erect the pyre: TrGF II adesp. F 126. In Ov. met. 9, 229–238 H. builds his own pyre and lies on it like a conviva, on the lionskin, his head on his club.

The river that tries to douse the pyre is the Dyras (Hdt. 7, 198, 2; Strabon 9, 4, 14 p. 428), modern Gorgopotamos. H.'s daughter Makaria tries to douse it: Douris, FGH 76 F 94. In Apollod. and Diod. (l.c.) H.'s ascent is meteorological. Ovid met. 9, 262–273, has him ascend in Zeus' chariot to the stars (sensit Atlas pondus). In Lucian (Herm. 7) he flies to the gods. Antipater wrote a poem (Anth. Pal. 9, 59 = Gow/Page, The Garland of Philip XLVI, and comm.) describing a palace ceiling (imaginary?) of Gaius (Augustus' adopted son; dated thus 1 B.C.) on which are painted H., Athena, Ares and Aphrodite being carried up to heaven on the backs of winged Victories (cf. Roux, G., RPh 37, 1963, 88–89).

See → Philoktetes for his possession of the bow.

The mainly Archaic scenes of the introduction to Olympus on foot and the chariot procession are placed first since it is arguable that they exclude the version involving the pyre and subsequent ascent to Olympus by chariot. See Commentary.

4. ROMAN

Cf. the Velletri sarcophagus, - Alkestis 21*, where Klauser and Schefold argue for H. at the gates of Olympus, and Wrede (Consecratio 248 no. 141, q. v. for references) argues for H. at the gates of Hades welcomed by Pluto.

B. The chariot procession (Archaic Greek)

H. and Athena, either or both on or mounting a chariot, in the company of other gods. In the early scenes (2877) Iolaos may be shown as driver (2878, 2879) (for later scenes with Iolaos as driver see 2932, 2933), but apotheosis is intended because the horses are winged (2877) and Hebe greets the chariot (2879). The main series of scenes run from about 540 to 490, and begin in a period when other divine epiphanies in chariot become common, but none are as common as these and the variety of other gods attending suggest a more general Olympian occasion, which can only be the apotheosis. Athena otherwise joins H. in a chariot only for gigantomachy, but then there would not be unarmed gods in attendance, or women, nor should they attend a leave-taking for a Labour, where Iolaos is the appropriate charioteer. It is not made explicit whether the journey is beginning (Iolaos may appear) or ending (Hebe may be suspected but Zeus is never shown). When Athena is not on the chariot (2903-2906) apotheosis may not be intended, and the dividing line between these and the scenes listed as H.'s chariot (Section II F) may have little subject-significance.

The lists are highly selective. Brommer lists some hundred examples of this general type.

Attic bf. vases

H. is fully dressed and armed unless otherwise stated.

I. Early scenes

On 2878-2880 (Tyrrhenian or related; see Carpenter 104-105 and OJA 3, 1984, 48-50) the chariot moves left.

Slope. - ABV 145, 19; Exekias; Para 60; Add<sup>2</sup> 40; Hesperia 6, 1937, 468-477 figs. 1-5; Simon, Götter 141 fig. 134; Schefold, SB II 41 fig. 40. - About 530 B.C. - With Apollo, Artemis, Poseidon, a woman, Hermes. H.'s hand on the rail is wrapped in his patterned cloak, not as restored in Moore, M., AJA 90, 1986, 37 fig. 1. Cf. also the Exekias amphora, Orvieto, Faina 187 (ABV 145, 11) where Poseidon is also present.

5. Herakles stands on the ground, Athena is on the chariot

Brommer, Vasenlisten<sup>3</sup> 161 Type Id. Also → Apollon 836* where Iolaos with a club stands behind the chariot.

6. Herakles mounts or stands on the chariot, Athena stands beside it

Without Athena on the chariot the apotheosis element is suppressed and there are fewer examples with attendant gods. Cf. Brommer, Vasenlisten<sup>3</sup> 162 Types Ic. e. Also 3302.

2903. Amphora. Cambridge, Fitzw. Mus. GR 10.1932 - ABV 141, 1; Towry Whyte P.; CVA 2 pl. 22, 2a; Carpenter pl. 30b. - About 530 B.C. - Before the horses a man on a stool. Cf. the woman on a stool on the hydria, Ars Antiqua (Luzern) 5, 1964, no. 118.

2904.* Column crater. Naples, Mus. Naz. H 2841. From Ruvo. - ABV 263, 7; related to the Lysippides P.; JdI 88, 1973, 23-24 figs. 26-27. - About 520 B.C. - With a woman (behind the chariot), Hermes, a man with sceptre and a woman.

2905. (= Apollon 833) Hydria. London, BM B 321. From Vulci. - Para 124; cf. Antimenes P.; CVA 6 pl. 84 (343), 1. - About 520 B.C. - With Dionysos, Apollo, Hermes. Cf. the column crater, Providence 29.140, with Iolaos, Dionysos, Apollo.

2906. (= 1419*) Neck amphora. Fort Worth,

Kimbell Art Mus., Hunt Coll. - Wealth of the Ancient World (1983) 52-53 no. 4: Three-Line group (v. Bothmer). - About 520 B.C. - H. wears himation. With Hermes, a boy at the horses' heads.

Cf. also the harnessing scenes, 1423-1427.

2907. (= Hermes 429*) Calyx crater. Copenhagen, Nat. Mus. 126. - ARV<sup>2</sup> 297, 11: Troilos P.; CVA 3 pls. 127, 129; Boardman, ARFHI fig. 188. - About 480 B.C. - Athena mounts the chariot. H. beyond it waves back to her. With Apollo (= Apollon 837), a woman (Artemis?), Hermes.

Non-Attic vase

2908.* (= 3292, = Aphrodite 1510*, = Iris I 147) Hydria, close to Northampton Group. Rome, Villa Giulia Mus. From Cerveteri. - ASAtene 24-26, 1946-48 (1950), pls. 3, 5; Schefold, SB II fig. 44; IconogrCl 54 figs. 7, 8. - About 520 B.C. - A woman (Athena or Hebe?) mounts the chariot leading H., carrying lionskin and club, by the wrist. Before the chariot winged Aphrodite and Hermes.

C. Herakles on the pyre

Also on the reliefs at Cadiz described by Silius Italicus (= [Dodekathlos] 1751). And cf. 874, bronze statue of H. wearing the poisoned cloak, and Aristides' painting (873).

2909.* (= Hyades 4) Bell crater frr., Attic rf. Rome, Villa Giulia 11688. From Conca. - Beazley, EVP 103-104; Clairmont, C., AJA 57, 1953, 85-89 pls. 45-48. - About 460 B.C. - A: (A woman) with a hydria; Athena turning back to her; the pyre on which H., wearing lionskin, lies with his head towards us, his arms hanging down. His club is beside the pyre and «grey strokes» at either side may represent water; a man running r. holding a bow (Philoktetes); a woman with a hydria. B: Women with hydriai. Cf. a bell crater frr., Leningrad, where H. kneels on the pyre (Beazley, EVP 104).

2912. (= Hyades 10) Limestone relief. Vienna, Niederösterreich. Landesmus. From Lichtenwörth (near Wiener Neustadt). - CSIR Öst. I 3, pl. 6, 158; Diez, E., GrazBeitr 5, 1976, 85-97; Festschr. E. Diez (1978) pl. 39, 6. - 2nd cent. A.D. - H. naked seated on pyre holding club and quiver (?). Before him Philoktetes holding a bow. Top l. Athena. Top r. two nymphs (?).

2913.* Marble relief. Leipzig, Univ. - Adl 1879 pl. E, 2. - Roman. - H. reclines naked, inert on the pyre. Beyond, part of a figure running r. holding a torch.

2914. Clay relief medallion, Gallo-Roman. Paris, Cab. Méd. 1139. From Orange. - Willeumier/Audin, Medaillons no. 3; Les Dossiers de l'Arch. 1975, 9, 108. - 1st cent. A.D. - H. naked seated on lionskin on pyre holding bowcase. Before him Philoktetes (named) wearing a nebris, holding bow and upturned torch.

2934. Bell crater fr., Corinthian rf. Corinth Mus. C-37-237. From Corinth. - Corinth VII 4, pl. 6, 30: Hermes P. - 400-370 B.C. - Only Hermes leading a chariot to r., as on Attic scenes where the action is normally to the l.

J. Herakles' chariot accompanied by other chariots

A series of silver and tin relief phialai and a patera show H.'s chariot, driven by Nike, accompanied by three other chariots with deities. The series may begin in the late 5th cent., though this has been doubted (Züchner, W., JdI 65/66, 1950/51, 205 n. 3; ignoring the reported grave context, see on 2934). They generate in Apulia (3rd cent. B.C.) a numerous series of Calene black copies (and some black and silvered clay copies in Etruria: Beazley, EVP 240. 292; → Herakles/Hercle 391). Silver and tin examples are listed in Brommer, Denkmälerlisten I 126, but note that no. 3 (Ferrara) was converted into a handled patera, and that nos. 6. 7 (New York) are mainly tin, not silver (Strong, o.c. infra). Calene examples are listed in Brommer, Vasenlisten<sup>3</sup> 166-169, but note that nos. 27-30. 36-38 are probably Etruscan (Beazley, l.c.); no. 18 is StudEtr 14, 1940, 434 fig. 2 (= De Marinis, R., Gli Etruschi a nord del Po [1988] 94-95 no. 553). Add: Berlin 5895 (Neugebauer, FührerBerlin II 185: «Hebe» and Ares, twice); Brussels, Mus. Roy. A 3522 (= Ares 79*); Essen, Folkwang Mus. A 96 (Froning, H., Gr. und it. Vasen [1982] no. 140); Harrogate, Kent Coll. 157; Liverpool (H. and Ares, thrice?); Melbourne, Felton Coll. 270/5 (Trendall, A. D., The Felton Vases [1968] pl. 16); Volterra 462 (Etruscan?); Sotheby, 11/12 June 1983, no. 309; Hobart 71 (Hood, R. G., Greek Vases in the University of Tasmania [1982] pl. 23a); Sydney, Nicholson Mus.; CVA Louvre 15 pls. 10, 2; 11, 1. 2. The charioteers are all Nikai. H. is beardless and holds a club. The other three chariots generally bear Athena, Ares and Dionysos. Deviant types double Athenas (omitting Ares), double Ares (omitting Dionysos), double both H. and Athena, double both H. and Ares (Etruscan?), add a chariot with Hermes, replace Athena with Aphrodite, have Apollo (→ Apollon 839*), have three chariots and move clockwise. The chariots are accompanied by small flying Nikai, Erotes or birds; and uniquely an eagle with Ganymede or alone. Animals may accompany the chariots - winged snake (Athena), dog or boar (Ares, H.), deer or panther (Dionysos). Nikai sometimes lead the chariots also. On one or two a zone around the omphalos carries reclining figures at feast, sometimes taken for the wedding feast of H. and Hebe though figures are not clearly identified. One typical and two uncommon examples are listed here.

H., with club and lionskin, in chariot leaping to l., raises his r. hand to Minerva whose upper part is seen emerging from a cloud, extending her r. hand to him.

Archaic Period

The Introduction of H. to Zeus on Olympus is an almost exclusively Attic scene. The Laconian 2861 is almost as early as any Attic, with Hera (?) beside the enthroned Zeus, and there were versions at Amyklai (2863) where, it seems, several gods were present. There is one uncertain Corinthian rf. scene (2864). In the Attic scenes which begin in the 560s Zeus is usually enthroned (beside a column on 2856); he stands on 2850-2853. Athena effects the introduction, sometimes holding H. (2849-2857) and supplying Zeus on 2849. H. shakes hands with Zeus (?) on 2853. Hera is enthroned behind Zeus on 2847, and perhaps is the figure standing beside him on 2850. 2856. 2857 (looking apprehensive). Hermes is almost always present, and occasionally Ares, Dionysos, Apollo, Poseidon; Iris and Ganymede on 2858 to enhance the welcome. The Sosias Painter's versions (2859. 2860) are far more populous and on 2859 there is a strong suggestion of an impending feast with Hermes carrying a ram and a sheep behind him, and Demeter perhaps with a charged spit. H. is pushed forward by Athena here, and Hera is beside Zeus. She is also by Zeus in the Acropolis Pediment (2862). It is not clear whether Poseidon is deliberately shown taking Zeus' place on 2865. 2866.

The question whether the scenes of the chariot procession (2877-2908) also allude to the apotheosis is discussed in the introduction to that section. Virtually all appear on Attic vases, starting c. 560. In the early ones Iolaos named (2878. 2879) or suspected (2877) is the charioteer, once with winged horses (2877), and Athena drives on 2880. On 2878-2880 the chariot moves left but thereafter, in common with most Attic chariot scenes, it moves right, with few exceptions (e.g., 2888). Identified deities in attendance are Aphrodite, Artemis, Demeter and Hermes on 2878; and Hera and Hebe on 2879. There is much offering of wreaths on these two vases. 2878-2880 are of, or related to, the Tyrrhenian Group, where the iconography is sometimes aberrant (cf. Carpenter, T. H., OJA 3, 1984, 45-56) but the air of Olympian celebration, even without Zeus, is obvious. Zeus' apparent absence from all the scenes listed here makes the occasion more a departure than an arrival, but escorted by H.'s future colleagues on Olympus. Iolaos cannot be thought of as joining H. on Olympus. He is absent in almost all the later scenes where Olympians attend, and serves H. as charioteer on more clearly terrestrial occasions, but the dividing line between these classes is not closely definable. The winged horses clearly denote apotheosis on the Lydos cup (2877). Only in the 530s do the scenes begin to appear at all regularly, increasing to about 510 and lingering a little over the end of the century. The principal variants are distinguished in the lists. Athena holds the reins when on or mounting the chariot. Any figure likely to be Iolaos is hard to identify but he may be the clubman on 2895, the spearman on 2892. Hermes is almost always present, Apollo slightly more frequently than Dionysos. Artemis may often be suspected, beside Apollo. A Poseidon (2884) or Ares (warrior) are extremely rare, and cf. the Leto kale of 2887. The identification of the other women present is uncertain, but Hebe might be expected, on the analogy of 2879, although she is more appropriately H.'s goal than his escort. Where H. is beardless his impending rejuvenation is presumably implied (2881. 2893) and a himation-clad H. also implies impending retirement (2896. 2897. 2900. 2906). The lebes-carrier on 2898 is borrowed from a wedding procession but might allude to H.'s future marriage to Hebe. There is also a man with a sceptre on 2904 and seated on a stool on 2903. In the only non-Attic version (2908) Athena drags H. on to the chariot with a gesture more appropriate to the introduction on foot to Zeus himself; Aphrodite and Hermes attend.

Classical period

H.'s self-immolation on the pyre on Mt Oita is first attested in any medium by the vases 2909. 2910 of c. 460 and later. The motif of rejuvenation through fire is an old eastern one but its introduction to this story cannot be closely dated. There is no allusion to it in Archaic literature or art (where the subject of apotheosis is often treated; see above). Worship at the site on Oita goes back to the Geometric period (see Boardman 2), but the story could be an aition for this and have attracted to it the story of the local hero Philoktetes who (himself, or his father Poias) lit the pyre and received H.'s bow (thus Nilsson 310-316 [= Opuscula I 348-349]; cf. Burkert, W., GRBS 7, 1966, 117). This tale too is not attested before these vases, on both of which Philoktetes appears. The dousing of the pyre by nymphs appears already on 2909 and the Philoktetes episode is isolated in an odd way on 2915. This makes it likely that the pyre, Philoktetes and dousing stories were created together at an unknown date before c. 460, but not in any literary text of which we have knowledge, although a play might seem a likely source. If the source is Archaic it took long to affect art or literature (perhaps Bakchyl. diith. 16, 13-16; certainly, Eur. Phil. [TGF<sup>2</sup> frag. 787-803] and Soph. Phil. 262 etc.; 409 B.C.). If later, the proximity of Thermopylai to Oita, the association of H. with both, and the role of his bow in eventually discomfiting easterners (in Philoktetes' hands at Troy) might have proved enough to generate the story.

From about 420 the interest shifts to H. being driven away from his pyre by Athena (2916. 2920) or Nike (2917-2919). Hermes leads the chariot on 2918. These scenes are on Attic and Apulian vases. H. is now shown beardless (except on the Attic 2919) and naked but for club and lionskin. An assemblage of gods attends on 2918. 2920, fewer on 2919, where columns recall either Olympus or H.'s hero shrine on earth, now left behind (see Section II D, 1). Zeus appears only on the Apulian 2921. Unexpected attendants are Eros on 2920 and Pan on 2921, possibly reflecting impending marriage and the rustic pyre respectively. On the Attic vases the abandoned pyre contains a muscle-corselet - a type never worn by H. but a symbol, it may be, of H.'s mortal body from which he rises newborn (the exusta mortalitate of Artemon's painting, 2921). Holt suggests that it indicates that H. was worshipped at Oita as a warrior. (It may be noted that the poisoned robe, or anything like it, appears in none of these Classical scenes with the pyre.) The dousing by nymphs (named on 2916) appears on all vases, but Philoktetes appears now only on the Attic 2917 (and perhaps 2918). The satyrs who approach the pyre on 2916 may be intent on theft of H.'s arms (for the motif see 3230-3238); one waits with a crater on 2919.

this same period some Attic and Apulian vases (and Corinthian ? 2934) show the chariot group only (2922-2925. 2927-2933). Only the Attic P. of London F 64 still offers a bearded H. (2922, cf. 2918) and a columned goal. H.'s pose, knees bent and chlamys flying, is often repeated. Occasionally he is shown mounting (2918. 2922-2924. 2929. 2932) and a rightward chariot is sometimes preferred in Apulia (but cf. 2931). The charioteer is usually Nike but Athena is retained in Apulia and possibly once in Attica (2931). It is not clear whether Iolaos could be intended on isolated Attic and Apulian scenes (2932. 2933), but see under 2932 for a vase on which he is named. The identity is unexpected. The hovering owl with a wreath is a feature of two Apulian versions (2927. 2928). Hermes commonly leads the chariot, but it is Eros on 2925 and Apollo and Eros greet it on 2924. Other deities are no longer in evidence.

H.'s chariot is accompanied by other deities in chariots (Ares, Athena, Dionysos) on a notable group of silver and tin relief phialai (2935) which are copied in clay in Apulia (Calene: 2936. 2937) and Etruria (see before 2935). Richter thought their origin is in the late 5th cent. The copies are at least 3rd cent. All were probably made in Italy.

The introduction to Zeus on Olympus, on foot, is not forgotten. The enthroned Zeus remains on a few Attic vases to the end of the 5th cent. (2867-2871) and much later on one Campanian (2872). H. looks apprehensive on 2867, Hera unamused on 2870. The alternative Archaic type (2851-2853) with Zeus standing seems confined to the Early Classical period in Attica (2873-2875), including probably Myron's group for Samos (2876). 2874 has a column. Athena holds H. on 2873. Various deities attend, notably Poseidon and Apollo; most appear on 2873, including Hera. 2875 is important in that the Hesperides tree is shown and H. is holding an apple, making it clear that here at least it is the miraculous apples that are his passport to Olympus. It is difficult to judge whether on the Baksy crater (2871) the arrival of H. in a chariot is the prime reason for the scene. His polos, and the presence of the Dioskouroi, are among the more puzzling features of the scene. The subject loses its appeal in the 4th cent. although, in the light of 2875, we may take single figures with the apples as an intimation of impending apotheosis.

Post-Classical

In later periods the fact of apotheosis is more important than the act. Calene relief vases have the chariot motif, deriving from Classical usage (2926. 2936. 2937) and in Roman art only the pyre is seen, and that rarely (2911-2914), and the unusual 2938 with H. ascending to Minerva in heaven, alone in his chariot.

B. Herakles and Apollon/Apollo

Although H., like → Apollon, was a son of Zeus, a renowned archer and an accomplished musician (see above section II, G), there was seldom any sympathy between the two half-brothers. They generally met only in conflict, usually over possession of the Delphic tripod, but also occasionally over a deer (see 2174-2181. 2196. 2197). They are rarely shown in harmony before the Roman period.

The trouble over the tripod began when H. sought advice from Apollo's oracle at Delphi. When no reply was forthcoming, H. became angry and started to carry off the Delphic tripod. Not unnaturally, Apollo tried to prevent him. The two were finally reconciled when H. returned the tripod and Apollo expounded the measures necessary to secure the expiation that H. required.

LITERARY SOURCES: Though the tripod story was apparently known from early times, only later narratives survive. Apollod. (bibl. 2 [129-131] 6, 2) gives a circumstantial account: after H. had killed → Iphitos (I), he was purified by Deiphobos, son of Hippolytos, but continued to be afflicted by a disease. He went to Delphi to find a cure, but when the Pythia refused to prophesy for him, he seized the tripod and declared that he would set up an oracle of his own. Apollo fought him and the two were separated only when Zeus threw a thunderbolt between them. H. was then given the advice he sought, namely that he should be sold into slavery for three years in order to pay compensation to Eurytos, the father of Iphitos. Other authors provide only few modifications or additions to this basic story: Plut. de E ap. Delph. 387d explains that H. was still young at the time; Hyg. fab. 32 and Serv. Aen. 8, 299 say that H. carried off the tripod on his visit to Delphi after the murder of his wife and children and specify that H. was sold into slavery to → Omphale. Paus. 10, 13, 7-8 notes that the Pythia was Xenokleia and that upon this occasion she observed «there was another H.» Diod. 4, 31, 5-6 is unusual in describing the consequences of H.'s murder of Iphitos and his service to Omphale while omitting any mention of the struggle for the tripod. Most other authors either mention or allude to the struggle without expanding on the theme: Cic. nat. 3, 42; Plut. de def. or. 413a-b; de sera 557c. 560d; Paus. 8, 37, 1; Ps.-Kallisthenes 1, 45; Schol. Pind. O. 9, 48. Pind. O. 9, 30-33 appears to be the earliest extant reference to H.'s conflict with Apollo, but he does not specify that it was related to the theft of the tripod.

The reconciliation of H. and Apollo, joint founders of Gythium, is mentioned in Paus. 3, 21, 8. According to Apollod. (bibl. 2 [71] 4, 11) Apollo was not hostile to H. from the start, and when other gods were bestowing gifts on H., he gave him a bow and arrows, and, according to Diod. 4, 14, 3 he also taught him their use. Paus. 8, 15, 5 records that H. set up a sanctuary to Apollo and Artemis in Arcadia, and built an altar for Apollo at Didyma (5, 13, 11). (Such is the scattered evidence pertaining to good relations between H. and Apollo. It had little effect on artists who overwhelmingly preferred to illustrate the conflict over the tripod.)

1. The struggle over the tripod

GREEK (see → Apollon 1009-1040, → Artemis 1291-1313)

a) The fight over the tripod

The tripod is upright between the two contenders who face each other, except on 2952, 2953 where H. is already moving off to the r., and 2951 where the tripod is held off the ground at an angle. The tripod is huge on 2947-2950. 2952, 2953. On 3019, 3020 the two face each other over the tripod, but a third figure intervenes between them.

(iii) H. and Apollo with a figure intervening

On 3019 and 3020 H. and Apollo confront each other; H. has not yet carried the tripod away, cf. section a.

Vases

3019. (= Artemis 1292*) Skyphos, Chalcidian, bf. Naples, Mus. Naz. SA 120. - Rumpf, ChalkVas pls. 171-174; Bothmer no. 7. - About 530 B.C. - Athena stands in the middle behind a huge tripod, holding the wrist of the archer on the l. On either side of the tripod, grasping it with both hands, stand archers wearing short chitoniskoi who are virtually mirror images of each other. The one to the l. should be Apollo because a winged female figure (Artemis?) stands behind him and because of Athena's animosity. Hermes stands at the far r. (see section a for similar arrangements of the two contestants, but without an intervening figure).

3021. (= Apollon 1034*, = Hermes 539a) Hydria, Attic bf. London BM B 316. From Vulci. - ABV 268, 24: Antimenes P.; CVA 6 pls. 79, 4; 83, 1; Bothmer no. 13. - 520-510 B.C. - Zeus in the centre, rushing l. but looking back to r. Movement to r. H., to r., wears lionskin, quiver, carries off the tripod, while

Apollo at the l. tries to restrain him. L. of Apollo, Artemis; r. of H., Hermes, at far r. Athena. The strange position of H.'s quiver suggests that this may be intended to be a back view.

Sculpture

3026.* (= Apollon 1038 with further refs.) East pediment of the Siphnian Treasury. Delphi Mus. - FDelphes IV 2, 153-162; Ridgway, B. S. AJA 69, 1965, 1-5 pls. 1-2; Bothmer no. 10. - About 525 B.C. - Zeus (in long chiton) centre, feet pointing r., head lost. H. wearing short chiton to r., thus movement to r. Woman (Artemis) to l. of Apollo. To l. and to r. a pair of shorter figures facing the corners flanked by chariots. The identity of these figures is obscure. Ridgway 5 n. 46 suggests that holes in the female figure r. of H. (smaller than he and facing away from him) may be for the attachment of an aegis, which would make her Athena, with the even smaller figure to her r. Iolaos, and perhaps (according to Bothmer 52) Hermes (very small) near the corner. These flanking figures, however, may not belong to the tripod story at all.

The struggle over the tripod

As early as the late 8th cent. B.C., representations appear of two male, helmeted figures in conflict over a tripod. A sealstone from Brauron (3059) shows the figures standing on either side of a central tripod; a bronze relief on a tripod leg from Olympia (3061) shows each one grasping one leg of a tripod. Neither inscriptions nor conventional attributes had come into common use at this early date and so it is difficult to decide whether these works are intended to be representations of H. and Apollo or are just generic scenes depicting competing athletes (Fittschen, Sagendarstellungen 28–32).

The story is illustrated recognisably and with increasing frequency from the middle of the 6th century B.C. Defradas, Parke and Boardman (1957) and Boardman (1978) have suggested that various historical associations and the symbolic interpretations consequent upon these contributed to the popularity of the theme in late Archaic art.

By the middle of the 6th cent. B.C. there existed at least one work which indisputably illustrates the story: the metope at Paestum (2969). Both figures are shown moving to the left, H. in the lead, Apollo trying to restrain him. H. is identified by his club, Apollo by the quiver on his back. A bronze relief on a shieldband (3062), made around the same time, is in poor condition and so is difficult to read, but Kunze suggests that it shows H. (seen from the back) moving to the right, looking behind him and brandishing his club, while pursued by Apollo, backed up by a female figure wearing a polos (Artemis?).

About the middle of the 6th cent. B.C. vase painters begin to illustrate the story. An Attic black-figure pyxis (2947) shows the two contenders facing each other on either side of the tripod, each grasping a ring. H. is clearly identified by his club and lionskin. The extensive selection of deities flanking the contenders is never repeated. The tripod, large and central, set vertically on the ground, is popular with the few artists who illustrate the story in the third quarter of the 6th cent. B.C., as for instance on the two Boeotian kantharoi (2948, 2949), in which H. is placed to the left and clearly identified by his club and lionskin and Apollo by his bow and arrow, and the Chalcidian skyphos (3019), in which Athena stands in the middle behind the tripod and the two contenders, both characterized as archers, are virtually indistinguishable.

The iconography of two other early vases is less clear-cut: the Swing Painter (3058) shows H. striding along in front of the tripod which rests on the ground in a scene that is interpreted as the restitution of the tripod in the presence of the Pythia, seated at the left.

An amphora by the Princeton Painter (1316) depicts H. bent beneath a huge tripod. The tripod in this case is probably an athletic prize, not the sacred object belonging to Apollo.

The years from around 530–515 B.C. see the theme gaining markedly in popularity in vase painting and the introduction of most iconographical types. The moment chosen for illustration from this time on usually shows H., having already lifted the tripod up, carrying it away while looking anxiously behind him. (2961 and 3046 are exceptional in portraying H. facing in the direction in which he is moving.) The hero carries his prize either to the right or (less frequently) to the left; Apollo hangs on to the tripod or pursues the thief.

Because H. moves in one direction but looks back in the other, his pose permits the construction of a balanced composition, tense on either side of the tripod. This balance is reinforced by the addition of Athena and Artemis (supporting H. and Apollo respectively) who frame the scene, usually facing inward (but see Bothmer 54) and who, from about 530 B.C. on, are included more often than omitted. Though balanced and basically symmetrical, the normal composition usually does not have a central accent; the emphasis is rather on the tug-of-war, the centrifugal pulling apart of the two contenders.

Occasionally a palm tree (2963, 2987) or a figure (3019–3026) is introduced to serve as a central feature – most conspicuously on the Siphnian Treasury (3026), where the design of the pediment demands it. The Antimenos Painter (3021) and a close colleague (3022) each introduce Zeus (as on the Siphnian Treasury) intervening between his two sons; the Amasis Painter (3020) and the painter of the hydria in Dijon (3023) place Hermes in this position. On the Chalcidian skyphos (3019) and on two Attic red-figure vases of the first quarter of the 5th cent. B.C. (3024, 3025), Athena is shown stepping between the contenders instead of supporting H. The central accent in the pediment of the Siphnian Treasury, though not entirely unparalleled in vase painting, nevertheless appears anomalous. So too is the presence of chariots (which on the Siphnian Treasury may or may not pertain to the story). Chariots (3034) or one chariot (3027) (and see Bothmer nos. 16–19 and pp. 52–53) also appear occasionally on vases, but they are exceptional.

The most popular Attic vase type (which is hardly ever adopted in other media) consists of four figures – the two protagonists flanked by their female divine supporters (Athena and Artemis). Movement to the right ultimately proves more popular. The attire of both protagonists is freely varied.

Depictions of H. moving to the right, shown in front view, generally portray H. wielding his club in his left hand. The majority of vase painters seem untroubled by this, but a minority are careful to depict the hero in back view when he is moving to the right, so that he can brandish his club in his right hand. The problem does not arise when H. is shown moving to the left, and there are no representations of the hero seen from the back when he moves to the left.

Palm trees are portrayed from time to time (2963, 2964, 2977, 2987 and see Bothmer 54). They are presumably intended as attributes of Apollo (like the deer [2964, 2975, 2988, 2998, 3001, 3031–3033, 3036, 3037, 3042 and see Bothmer 61] which is sometimes included), since this story is of necessity set at Delphi rather than at Delos. Columns (2973, 3039–3042) and altars (3039–3041) (and see also Bothmer nos. 22–28) are also occasionally introduced to indicate the setting.

During the last quarter of the 6th cent. B.C., three shieldband reliefs were devoted to this subject; two (2954, 2955) show the contenders facing each other, the third shows them moving to the right (2984). A pierced terracotta plaque from Corinth (2970) shows H. moving to the left; the rest of the group is missing.

5th and 4th cent. B.C. coins (3045, 3048) show H. by himself carrying the tripod. Such an excerpt appeared first in the last quarter of the 6th cent. B.C. (3043, 3046) and recurs with increasing frequency during the early 5th cent. B.C. (3044, 3047, 3050, 3051) (and see Bothmer nos. 167–175 and p. 61), along with representations in which H. and Apollo are shown on opposite sides of the vase (2957–2961) and see Bothmer nos. 161–166 and p. 60). (For representations of Apollo alone with the tripod with possible reference to this story, see → Apollon 384* and → Apollon/Apollo 269.)

Very few vases treat the theme in the 4th cent. B.C., for instance, a Lucanian volute crater (2968) and an Attic bell crater (3052), which is often interpreted as depicting the reconciliation of H. and Apollo. This amicable conclusion to the story appears to have been represented on a marble relief in Todi (3071) centuries later, on which the two erstwhile contenders are again shown shaking hands (the theft is represented on another side, 3067), and it may also have been theme of the statues of H. and Apollo at Gythium, 3053.

Thereafter artists seem to have lost interest in the subject until the late Hellenistic period, when it was revived in the neo-Attic style on a number of Campana reliefs (3064) in which H. and Apollo face each other symmetrically (H. on the right), each grasping the tripod that stands between them (in a schema that is very close to the earliest representations of the theme, but in a style that is very different) and a series of neo-Attic reliefs (3066) in which the figures are shown daintily moving to the left, H. leading, but turning to look behind him. An omphalos is represented between the two contenders. In both the Campana plaques and the neo-Attic reliefs, H. is shown wearing the lionskin over his head but falling behind him like a cape with a belt securing it at his waist. The relief at Lycosura (3055) mentioned by Paus. (8, 37, 1) may have been like one or other of these two types.

The renewed popularity of the subject may have gained impetus from Augustan propaganda, since Augustus claimed Apollo as his patron from the time of the battle of Actium and Mark Antony numbered H. among his ancestors. Campana reliefs were used to decorate the temple of Apollo on the Palatine. Neo-Attic reliefs of the type (3066) continued to be produced with little change as late as the Antonine period.

Two Samian coins (3070) show H. moving to the left, looking behind him, in a schema that is reminiscent of the tripod iconography, but the tripod itself is missing. Numismatists (see Voegtli 68–69) suggest that the image on the coins might have been derived from a Samian monument in which the theft of the tripod was represented but from which the tripod itself (perhaps made of precious materials) had been lost. There is no evidence that such a statuary group ever existed, but Apollo's son, Lykomedes, who serves as his father's charioteer on a column crater in New York (3034) does provide a tenuous Samian link (cf. Paus. 7, 4, 1).

Other scenes

The few late groups of H. and Apollo (3072–3075) reflect cult associations and are mainly in minor art.

C. Herakles and Ares/Mars

H. fought three of Ares' sons – → Kyknos (I) (and → Ares 33–44), Lykaon (see Section VI) and Diomedes (Section IV, J) – and in fighting Kyknos (cf. → Ares 33–44) attacked Ares himself, having already attacked and wounded him at Pylos (Hes. sc. 357–367). Ares helps Acheloos against H. on the wooden box in the Treasury of the Megarians at Olympia (→ Ares 77; Paus. 6, 19, 12). It is the belt of Ares that H. acquires from Hippolyte (LIMC I p. 634). Ares sometimes occupies one of the flying chariots accompanying H. to Olympus (2935–2937). The dispute over Kyknos is alluded to on the Roman clay medallion, → Ares/Mars 494* (= Athena/Minerva 330), where H. and Mars stand before Jupiter, Victoria and Minerva. Other scenes of H. with Mars and Jupiter are 3378, 3379. In Rome H. could be equated with Mars: secundum pontificalem ritum idem est Hercules qui et Mars (Serv. Aen. 8, 275; cf. Macr. Sat. 3, 12, 5–6). See Brommer, Herakles II 100.

D. Herakles and Artemis/Diana

H. confronts Artemis in the Labour over the Kerynitian deer (Section IV, E) and when she supports Apollo against him. See also under 2124 (attending the boar Labour), and → Artemis 1318a* (Vollkommer 53 fig. 70), an Apulian rf. vase where Artemis is crowning H. in the presence of Pan. H. is with Diana and Silvanus on the 2nd cent. A.D. reliefs, → Artemis/Diana 279, 299. She appears between H. and Dionysos on a Roman relief at Tegea (= 311*). They are associated in cult in Thrace: see → Artemis (in Thracia) 36, and, for Dacia, Barbulescu, M., Acta Musei Napocensis 14, 1977, 187 no. 74 pl. 4 (sarcophagus: H. with ketos and Diana at either side of reclining dead woman). H. dedicated a stone lion to her in Thebes (Paus. 9, 17, 2). Diana shared a couch with H. at the first Roman lectisternium of 399 B.C. (Liv. 5, 13, 6). See Brommer, Herakles II 100.

E. Herakles with Athena

Athena appears as H.'s patron and protector early in literature (Homer) and only a little later in art. She occasionally offers physical aid to him, but generally does no more than encourage or observe in the action scenes, and stands by him in others. In Archaic Athens a special relationship is particularly emphasised both by her presence in action and other scenes, and by some special groups involving libation or the hand-clasp.

LITERARY SOURCES: Athena's patronage of H. is surprisingly little documented in early literature. In Hom. Il. 8, 362–369 she recalls how she helped the hero in his Labours for Eurystheus – he had only to cry for help and Zeus would send her down – and through her he returned over the Styx with Kerberos. It is the same episode that is recalled by H. himself in Hades in Od. 11, 626, where he records the assistance of Athena and Hermes. Athena with the Trojans made the walled refuge for H. at Troy in the Hesione episode (Il. 20, 145–147). In the many references to H. in Hesiod Athena is seldom mentioned – her counsel in the Hydra episode (theog. 316–318), handing him his weapons at Pylos (fig. 33a, 31–33 Merkelbach/West), pointing out Periklymenos the bee (fig. 33b). She is prominent in [Hes.] scutum, helping H. against → Kyknos (I) and Ares – he dons the corselet she gave him at the start of his Labours (124–127), she encourages H. and Iolaos (325–337), mounts their chariot and puts mettle into their horses (338–344), tries to check Ares, then turns aside his spear (443–449, 455–456). After these early sources references to Athena's active help to H. remain meagre. In the Labours she provided the bronze castanets to set up the Stymphalian birds (Apollod. bibl. 2 [93] 5, 6) and she receives and returns the apples of the Hesperides (ibid. 2 [121] 5, 11). She assisted him against the Pylians (Paus. 6, 25, 2; cf. 8, 18, 3). After his madness she brings him to his senses by casting a stone at him and so prevents him killing also Amphitryon (Eur. Herc. 1001–1008; Paus. 9, 11, 2) or Iphikles (Asklep. Trag., FGH 12 F 27). She takes him to Phlegra to fight the giants (Apollod. bibl. 2 [138] 7, 1). Upon his retirement from active service, when the gods bestow gifts, she gives him a fine robe (Diod. 4, 14, 3; Apollod. bibl. 2 [71] 4, 11). H. founded the sanctuary of Athena at Sparta (Paus. 3, 15, 6) but there is little evidence of joint cult: in Chios (Athena 1908, 227). H. statuettes are dedicated in the Classical sanctuary of Athena at Kakopetria in Cyprus (Karageorghis, V., RDAC 1977 197 and cf. PraktAkad-Ath 52, 1977, 163-180). For H. on the Athenian Acropolis see Commentary.

a) At an altar

3156.* Neck amphora, bf. Leiden, Rijksmus. PC 5 (xv i 57). - ABV 370, 128: Leagros Group; CVA I pl. 31 (125), 1. - 510-500 B. C. - H. with club, l. hand raised - does not hold cup. Athena holds a jug over a burning altar between them. Behind her, Hermes.

3157.* Neck amphora, bf. Hobart, Univ. 45. - Para 172: Group of Berkeley 8.3376; Hood, R. G., Greek Vases in the Univ. of Tasmania (1982) 23 pl. 7b. - 510-500 B. C. - A, and B: Athena pours into H.'s kantharos over an altar.

3158. (= 3320) Amphora Type B, rf. New York, private. - ARV 583, 2: P. of London 95; Para 392; Schauenburg pl. 7, 2. - About 450 B. C. - Athena pours into H.'s kantharos (Sotadean). He leans forward on his club. Behind her a burning altar. Behind him a woman with a fillet, and Hermes.

3159.* Oinochoe, rf. Paris, Louvre N 3415 (L 62). From Athens. - ARV 607, 87: Niobid P.; Webster, T. B. L., Der Niobidenmaler (1935) pl. 22 c. d. - About 450 B. C. - Young H. leans forward on his club, with lionskin, quiver and bow, holding a phiale to pour over an altar, behind which is an olive tree. Athena holds a jug. Cf. the rf. pelike, Zurich market, with H. in himation over lionskin: Schauenburg, K., RM 93, 1986, 151.

b) Herakles is seated

3160. (= Hermes 326) Skyphos, bf. South Hadley, Mt. Holyoke Coll. B.SII.3.1925. - Theseus P. (Vanderpool; see ABV 519, 18); Buifron, no. 22. - About 500 B. C. - A and B: H. seated on a block holding a phiale into which Athena pours. H. holds his club between his knees. Behind him a tree (not on B) and Hermes piping. Similar the bf. skyphos, Dresden ZV 680; Haspels, ABL 249, 10 (H. wearing himation).

3161.* (= Athena 181) Skyphos, bf. London, BM 1902.12-18.3. From Boeotia. - Haspels, ABL 249, 9: Theseus P.; JHS 31, 1911, 4 fig. 4 (B); 6 fig. 5 (A); Boardman, ABFH fig. 246 (B). - About 500 B. C. - A: H. seated on a throne in lionskin, himation and chiton, holding club, quiver and bow beside him on ground. Athena has filled a phiale from a jug and hands it to him. Behind him a satyr with a goat. B: as A, but H. on a block and holds phiale being filled by Athena. Frr. in Basel, Kambli Coll., apparently bear a similar scene (Haspels, ABL 250, 11; Para 255).

3162. (= 3318) Lekythos, bf. Once Agrigento, Granet Coll. - Near Athena P. (Beazley 56 no. 3); Benndorf, GSV pl. 42, 4. - Early 5th cent. B. C. - H. seated on block, holding club and a phiale into which Athena pours. Behind him a woman holds a wreath over his head. Behind Athena Hermes shakes hands with Iolaos.

3163. (= Athena 187*) Cup, rf. Munich, Antikenslg. 2648. - ARV 441, 185: Douris; Para 521; Add 240; Lullies, R./Hirmer, M., Gr. Vasenbilder der reifarch. Zeit (1953) pls. 88. 89; Simon, Götter 206 fig. 92; Kunisch 186 fig. 7. - About 470 B. C. - Tondo, H. seated on a rock, club on ground behind him, holds a kantharos into which Athena pours. She holds an owl; her helmet on a block behind her. A tree between them.

3164.* (= 3328) Bell crater, rf. Murcia Mus. 2594. From Murcia. - Trias de Arribas, G., Cerámicas gr. de la Peninsula Iberica (1968) pl. 179; García Cavo, J. M., Ceram. gr. de la Region de Murcia (1982) pls. 2. 3; Vollkommer 47 fig. 60. - Early 4th cent. B. C. - H. seated naked on lionskin, holding club upright and kantharos (Sotadean). Before him Athena with jug. Behind her Dionysos and a woman. Behind H. a youth and a woman (Hebe?) holding out her hand over him. This resembles other scenes of this period in which H. may hold a cup but Athena has no jug, so the libation motif is not explicit, as here. Other examples are: Rf. cup, Switzerland, Private Coll.; Schefold, Meisterwerke 194 no. 208. Rf. cup, Athens, NM Acr. 208; ARV 399 mid; Graef/Langlotz II pl. 11. The lone H. in a cup in Tarquinia is an excerpt from such scenes (MonAnt 36, 1937, 487 fig. 131 left; Beazley, EVP 72).

C. - Young H. with lionskin draped over handle of club, propped on a rock, holds out a kantharos (Sotadean) to Athena who raises a jug. Other examples are: Rf. cup fr., Adria, Mus. Naz. B 561; ARV 831, 21. Rf. neck amphora, Leningrad B 4511; ARV 667, 6; Peredolskaya pl. 92, 1.

e) Herakles is standing, holding his club upright on the ground

f) Herakles stands with his foot raised

3177. (= Hera 467 with bibl., = Iris I 151) Bell crater, rf. Omaha, Joslyn Art Mus. 1963.485. - ARV<sup>2</sup> 1163, 40: P. of Munich 2335; CVA 1 pl. 34. - About 430 B.C. - H. with one foot on rock, naked but for quiver, shouldering club, holds out kantharos (Sotadean) to Athena, who stands frontal with a jug. Behind him a woman with sceptre («Hera», Beazley). Behind Athena is Iris. Kossatz-Deissmann (→ Hera 467) takes this libation to infer that Athena is reconciling H. with Hera, but the latter's (if it is she) gesture of recoil simply indicates repugnance for the Athena/H. group, and she appears in no other libation group with them.

Boeotian vase

4. Herakles and Athena shake hands (dexiosis)

H. is always fully dressed and at the l. unless otherwise stated.

The early period and Archaic non-Athenian scenes

Some 30 H. episodes are known in Greek art down to about 620 B.C. (cf. Fittschen, Sagendarstellungen, chart at end) but on none of them does Athena certainly appear. More than once in this period, however, she is shown in support of → Perseus. She is seen supporting H. against the Hydra, first on a Corinthian vase of about 610-600 (→ Athena 11*; 1990). Thereafter she appears more than once on Corinthian vases in the same episode (1991. 1992. 1994. 1995) and on some she holds a small jug, possibly to hold for H. the Hydra's venomous blood; certainly not to refresh him (cf. Boardman, J., OJA 1, 1982, 237-238). She attends on Corinthian also in the centauromachy and Kerkopes episodes, always unarmed; in the centauromachy (Paris L 173; Schefold, Sagenbilder pl. 62) it may be noted that Hermes holds a bowl, standing beside Athena. These Corinthian vases, however, represent a very meagre proportion of the H. episodes depicted in the ware. On another Corinthian work, the chest of Kypselos, she again supports H. against the Hydra (Paus. 5, 17, 11) and in the Archaic cedar-wood group made by the Spartan Medon and shown in the Megarian Treasury at Olympia (Paus. 6, 19, 12; Beckel 46-47) she attends his fight with Acheloos (Acheloos 228).

The record is even more meagre in most other non-Athenian scenes. On Laconian bf. Athena appears only to lead H. to Olympus in a scheme which follows Attic models (2861) as she does on the Amyklai throne (Paus. 3, 18, 11). Attic too is the inspiration for the mufti Athena attending the Hydra scene once in Eretrian bf. (2007). She is ignored in East Greece and Boeotia (in the Amazonomachy of Acr. 466, Graef/Langlotz I pl. 22, the onlooker may be Athena but the piece is not certainly Boeotian), and on the Peloponnesian shield-bands, except perhaps against Ares/Kyknos (Kunze, Schildbänder 246). At Sicyon she appeared with H. in Dipoinos' and Skyllis' group with Apollo and Artemis, generally taken to be the struggle over the tripod (Overbeck, SQ no. 321; see 3063). And in late Archaic sculpture she presides over what appears to be H.'s attack on Troy on the east pediment of the Temple of Aphaia on Aegina (2792) and may be part of a large clay fighting group involving H. at Olympia (OlympBer VI [1958] 169-188).

In the west she is ignored on the Caeretan hydriae, as she had been in East Greece but on the Ricci hydria (2908) which also has an East Greek background, she pulls H. onto the chariot for the ride to Olympus. Here Attic influence must be the reason for her presence, and the same source explains why the Chalcidian bf. painters are generous in showing her with H. – in the tripod episode, against Geryon, the Lion, and the centaurs. In the many H. episodes on the Silaris Herakion metopes she is ignored.

Athenian Archaic scenes

On the few early Archaic Athenian scenes of H.'s activities Athena does not appear at all. (It seems to me most unlikely that the bird on the Middle Protoattic New York Nessos vase is her owl: Schefold, Sagenbilder pl. 23; Fittschen, Sagenstellungen 116.) From about the 560s, a period when Athena's own image in Athens changes abruptly to that of the warrior goddess, there is an equally dramatic development in her role with H. She becomes a regular attendant at most of H.'s adventures (see especially Beckel) so that her absence is often more remarkable than her presence. Details of her attendance or participation will be found elsewhere and a summary only is given here. Though she is credited with active participation in a few episodes by ancient authors, even if only in the provision of weapons, this is rarely indicated in art, and not generally on the occasions picked upon by authors. In a fight against Geryon she takes an active part (2469). Otherwise her presence is characterised by total passivity in sitting down to watch, sometimes beside a waiting chariot (e.g., → Alkyoneus 6*), to a degree of movement by way of encouragement, to positive gestures of encouragement (notably in such a dangerous moment as the approach to Kerberos [2554]), to bustling belligerent support against other Olympians – against Apollo, or Ares over Kyknos (e.g., Berlin F 1732; ABV 110, 37: Lydos; = Ares 42*; → Athena 519*; and the Euphronios crater, GettyMusJ 9, 1981, 29–34 [= Athena 520]; cf. the shield band, Kunze, Schildbänder 246). In the latter encounter, however, she may also be shown separating the contestants (Vian, F., REA 47, 1955, 20–21).

She is commonly absent in the multi-figure scenes of Amazonomachy, Centauromachy, the fighting at Oichalia and against → Bousiris; less explicably so in the fights with → Nereus and → Triton, and H. needs no support when he carries off the → Kerkopes. She attends some other, unusual encounters (2822, 2823, 2839). In the Gigantomachy Athena is usually close to H. and in many scenes appears only with him, commonly on a chariot. She is invariably his escort in both the chariot procession, presumably to Olympus and in the presentation to Zeus (Section VIII). On Olympus she is his usual partner in assemblies of gods, and she regularly attends his performance as a musician (Section II, G) and his relaxation as a sole symposiast (1486*–1493). Illogically H. may be shown attending the birth of Athena who was to introduce him to Olympus (→ Athena 35, 349*).

The most significant of the Archaic Athenian scenes are those which show H. and Athena alone, or only in the company of Hermes or Iolaos, or as the principal figures in other divine assemblies (distinguishing these from assemblies in which they are no more than another two divinities, though normally paired). They begin in the 560s but are commonest in the middle years of the second half of the 6th cent. and do not outlive the Archaic period in any numbers. Earliest, perhaps, a two-sided plaque from the Acropolis (3087) with the striking Athena on one side, H. on the other. His iconographic role on Athena's Acropolis was an important one, as can be seen from the Archaic pedimental compositions devoted to his exploits (twice fighting → Triton, Introduction to Olympus [2862], fighting the Hydra [2021]) but it is perhaps surprising to find so little evidence for any cult role, although the Acropolis was by no means wholly devoted to worship of the city goddess. (H. is named on an Archaic base from the Acropolis, probably not as receiver of the dedication: Raubitschek, Dedications no. 60. Reliefs with H.: Walter, RelAkr nos. 122 [= 2201], 123 [see after 1379], 124) There is a good range of H. scenes on vases from the Acropolis, though little exceptional; cf. 1411, 1453 for slightly unusual scenes. There is a rare Chian fr. with him (57*), and an Etruscan bronze tripod with a group apparently showing the apotheosis (→ Herakles/Hercle 121).

In vase scenes where H. and Athena are alone, facing each other (3080–3086) there is little remarkable except for H.'s unusually animated pose on 3080. Where they face the same way (3087–3094) the processional element might suggest progress to Olympus, and 3093 is notable, where they approach a building. Where both are seated (3095) we might suspect an extract from a gathering on Olympus, but otherwise there is nothing distinctive to place these scenes. With the addition of Hermes, however, which is far commoner (3107–3121), the suggestion of the journey to Olympus may be stronger, though the scenes in which they are all moving in one direction are decidedly in the minority (3115–3118); on 3116 H. displays remarkable agitation, and on 3118 Hermes rides a ram. They are sometimes joined by Iolaos or anonyms, including women (3119–3121). A few Archaic Athenian scenes, concentrating on the couple, admit other deities, normally Poseidon (3130) or Dionysos (3131–3134), and the fact that there is such a choice may indicate that the other deities are, as it were, guests or companions rather than that the scenes are again extracts from an Olympian assembly.

The most intimate of the scenes between hero and goddess involve more specific acts of either libation or the handshake. The libation scenes have been listed (3156–3178) without regard to whether H. holds a phiale or a kantharos. The phiale in H.'s hand indicates the usual libation act which we see performed in the 6th cent. mainly for mortal or ceremonial occasions of departure, and in the 5th cent. often between deities (cf. Eckstein-Wolf and Simon). None of these scenes with H. and Athena are earlier than about 510 so they may be regarded as an early but exceptionally prolific version of the libation with divine pairs, the implication being that H. at least approaches the status of Athena, as a divinity. When H. holds a kantharos the scene has sometimes been described as of Athena regaling H. (so by Haspels and Beazley), as though the act is simply a matter of refreshment. (On the significance of the vessel held by Athena on Corinthian and one Attic scene of H. with the Hydra, see above.) In the Athenian scenes there is no iconographic distinction between those involving a kantharos and those with a phiale. Athena pours indifferently into either and they appear in almost equal numbers. On the two scenes where an altar is also shown, clear indication of libation rather than regaling, the vessel is once omitted (3156), once a kantharos (3157); cf. the Classical scenes with kantharos (3158) or phiale (3159). Where a tree is shown it may be Athena's olive rather than a rustic, picnic setting. The act is clearly intended to be the same whatever the vessel. In nearly half the instances with the kantharos it is of H.'s special Sotadean shape. Hermes is quite often present, perhaps as catalyst between hero and deity, and on one vase a satyr (3161). Athena is usually pouring into H.'s cup. H. is often shown seated before her (3160–3164), sometimes on a throne (3161) or rock (3163); being crowned by a woman on 3162. The simple standing type is introduced on the Berlin P. vase (3165) but in the Archaic period when he stands he generally holds his club upright on the ground (3173) or leans on it (3168–3170). The pose is a restful one, possibly even indicating tiredness as though this is the welcoming libation after Labours accomplished (in which case an element of 'regaling' might be admitted). This mood is enhanced by the fact that he is quite often shown not in simple fighting kit but in a himation (3168, 3170) and this, combined with the leaning posture, puts one in mind of the old-man grave reliefs of late Archaic.

The libation is a post-Pisistratid motif, but the dexiosis handshake (3179–3189) appears by about 540 though it is most popular in the years around 500. Hermes is sometimes present (3180, 3182, 3183), once with Iolaos (3186) and on 3179 perhaps other gods. There is an altar between them on 3185 and what might be a sanctuary setting on the Theseus P. versions (3183). The motif is a comparatively rare one at this period (compare Hermes and the man, possibly Iolaos, on 3162, and the implication of acceptance or greeting might also be taken to imply an Olympian reception, or at least return from Labours completed. Finally, notice how often an animal is included. They (cattle, panthers [some for Dionysos?], deer; the dog and goat are perhaps Hermes') possibly indicate a terrestrial rather than Olympian setting, though the bull and deer could allude to Labours (in a surprising way) and the bull to sacrifice (thus Durand, J.-L., Sacrifice et labour [1986] 34–35, but he takes no account of the other animals). Early scholars attempted to demonstrate some erotic connection between Athena and H. on the basis of some of the scenes discussed (cf. Braun, Welcker, Gerhard). This has been rightly discounted. (Cf. also 1423, 2888, 2898.)

Classical and Hellenistic period

After the Archaic period Athena's presence in scenes with H. becomes somewhat less common, except where it is a necessary part of the action, as in the Introduction to Olympus, at Eleusis or in the Gigantomachy (→ Athena 54, 358, 360, 363, 364, 369.

422, 458, 459, 483–491). This is partly due to a relative overall lapse of interest in scenes with H. after the spate of Archaic representations, especially in Athens, and in part due to the monuments on which they are shown, such as metopes, where the restrictions of the field play their part. To this the metopes of the Temple of Zeus at Olympia are a striking and unique exception ([Dodekathlos] 1705). Here we see for the first time a deliberately youthful Athena comforting the weary young H. after his encounter with the lion (1919); a unique representation of Athena receiving the Stymphalian birds from H. (2265); a unique scene of her assisting H. with the load of the heavens as Atlas brings the apples (2283); and a unique scene of her directing his demolition of the walls of the stables of Augeias (2302). These had no perceptible influence on other works of art and the insistence on Athena is surprising in a Peloponnesian work, unless it is her role as Zeus' daughter and protector of his hero-son that is emphasised. In the equipping of H., which occupied writers, Athena plays the part of intermediary in handing him the club made for him by Hephaistos on a Hellenistic relief bowl (3155). In Athens her presence beside H. in the painting of Marathon in the Stoa Poikile, named with the hero Marathon and Theseus (3151), and on the Niobid P.'s name vase which may also have Marathonian associations (Harrison, E., Art Bulletin 54, 1972, 390–402; 3520), show that in art at least the hero still has a role as an Athenian-adopted hero, no less than Theseus, and that this is demonstrated by his presence beside the city goddess. On the relief 3152 they attend Demos (?) and he may be crowning her. For more specific association between them in Athens we turn, as in the Archaic period to the vases. Where the two are shown alone together the setting and postures are quite casual (3085, 3086, 3096). On 3094 H.'s animated pose and gestures suggest that he is setting off to an adventure, and on 3096 it may be that Athena is visiting H. in his own sanctuary. They sit together on 3114 while Hermes hurries by, and here, H., in himation and chiton only, has the air of a veteran. Hermes also attends on 3125 and on 3126 and 3136, where Athena is crowning H., the hero is young. On 3135 it is likely that the warrior who stands between them is a youthful Iolaos. The old man on 3136 is notable. The libation motif persists into the early 4th cent. but by that time (3164) embedded in a multi-figure scene; and it is copied in Boeotia (3178). Either kantharos or phiale is used in scenes with an altar (3158, 3159). The simple standing pose for both is favoured in the 5th cent. (3166, 3167) on the model of the Berlin P. vase (3165). The types with H. leaning on his club is continued (3171, 3172) but H. is not so obviously a veteran and on 3172 he is young. The handshake dexiosis is far rarer after the Archaic period (3187–3189) and on 3187 seems combined with libation since a youth approaches with phiale and jug. Although the Athenian scenes concentrating on hero and goddess do not much outlive the 5th cent. the theme is later taken up on South Italian vases (3097, 3098, 3140–3146) where H. is almost always shown young. The libation and handshake are not carried west. In Athens their place is taken by multi-figure scenes in which Nike and other figures may be present, and usually, though not always, Athena. It has proved convenient to list these separately (3403-3411) despite the fact that Athena is almost always present, since the hero is the focus of interest and not his association with the goddess alone (cf. also 1370*. 1371. 1373*. 1391*). The strongly Athenian association is carried to Thebes, H.'s birthplace, in the Athenian dedication there at the end of the 5th cent. (3099). The association is observed in coins of Lape- thos (3102. 3103) but is infrequent on other late Clas- sical monuments: 3100. 3101. 3104-3106. 3153. 3154. For Athena and H. on either side of coins → Athena 178. 308. 311. 333.

Roman period

Rome displayed one of the finest Archaic groups, the clay figures from Sant'Omobono (→ Athena/Min- nerva 386*, → Herakles/Hercle 131) but in later pe- riods there are few simple groups, though in Olym- pian gatherings H. is usually beside Minerva (→ Dode- katheoi). The gestures on 3191. 3198 and cf. 3192. 3194. 3197 are unusual, but perhaps to be taken as of no greater intimacy than that of the Archaic dexiosis. With other couples, however, the hand on forearm gesture seems also affectionate; cf. Zeus and Hera on the Pompeian painting (Reinach, RépPeint 8, 4), Pe- leus and Thetis on the Portland vase (Ashmole, B., JHS 87, 1967, 6 pl. 1; Haynes, D. E. L., JHS 88, 1968, 61). → Athena/Minerva 369. 385 (our 3191. 3198) take H. to be kissing Athena's hand. We see the ges- ture on a sarcophagus where he still holds the defeated Antaios (→ Antaios I 47* = Athena/Minerva 378). And cf. the Classical mirror reliefs, → Auge 9, and Muscarella, O. W., Ancient Art (Schimmel Coll. 1974) no. 33. Athena attends H.'s Labours and other en- counters less commonly in Roman art, where the em- phasis is more clearly on H.'s unaided achievement and courage. For Minerva and H. on either side of coins → Athena/Minerva 49. 121.

G. Herakles and Dionysos/Bacchus/satyrs

Herakles and Dionysos were both relative new- comers to Olympus and are also linked through H.'s fondness for wine. There is little evidence for joint cult except in Chios (Athena 1908, 227. 228), in Tha- sos (cf. 45), and, under Septimius Severus, at his birth- place in Leptis Magna, and none for any close myth- association. They feast together in Archaic Greek art, and H. joins the Dionysiac thiasos, generally drunk- enly, in Roman art. Satyrs rob H. of his weapons.

3206.* Pelike, Attic rf. Brussels, Mus. Roy. R 235. From Capua. - ARV 1121, 11: late mannerist; CVA 2 pl. 19 (72), 4; Feytmans, D., AntCl 14, 1945, pls. 2-5. - Mid 5th cent. B.C. - A and B are chariot scenes with a woman and youth, the woman with jug and phiale (A), torches (B). Under the handles are H. seated on a rock holding out a kantharos (Sotadean) and looking round, and Dionysos on a chair with kan- tharos and sceptre. Feytmans thinks the whole compo- sition Eleusinian, with Triptolemos.

2. Herakles with Dionysos and others (usually satyrs/maenads)

Dionysos attends H. at music (1446. 1447*. 1449. 1472*), tripod-carrying (1319), at a Labour (2127).

3210. Lekythos, Attic bf. Bolton, Mus. A.1.1963. - Para 212, 2: P. of Oxford 245; ArchRepts 1977/78, 89 fig. 1. - About 500 B.C. - H. fully dressed, seated on stool at l., looking round at cave (?) or rock. Before him Dionysos (with kantharos) and a woman seated facing r.; a seated Athena and a second Dionysos with kantharos, looking round at them. Cf. Athens, NM 9687 (ABV 491, 58) with a seated H., two Dionysoi and a satyr.

3211. (= Dionysos 839* part) Psykter, Attic rf. Compiègne, Mus. Vivenel V 1068. From Vulci. - ARV 2 188, 66: Kleophrades P.; CVA 1 pl. 13, 15. 16; HDG (Rouen) no. 106. - About 500 B.C. - H. hold- ing bow and club faces Dionysos holding kantharos and ivy. On a low «bench» running behind them and around the vase crawl six satyrs. Before the bench stand craters, between H. and Dionysos a kantharos.

3212. Column crater, Attic rf. Rome, Villa Giulia 8346. From Nepi. - ARV 290, 5: Tyszkiewicz P.; Para 355; Galinsky, G. K., The Herakles Theme (1972) fig. 4. - About 480 B.C. - Young H. in chlamys, with club and kantharos, follows Dionysos who looks round. Hermes follows H., a piping satyr precedes Di- onysos.

3213. Stamnos, Attic rf. Geneva, Private. - Stamnoi (Exhib. J. Paul Getty Mus. 1980) no. 13: Tyszkiewicz P. - About 480 B.C. - A: H. in chlamys with club and kantharos, with two youths, with skyphos and lyre. B: Hermes looking round, a man in exomis, and Diony- sos looking round, all with cups, a piping satyr. Hermes' glance links the two sides as a Dionysiac ko-mos including mortals with H. on A; the man on B might be Hephaistos.

3214. Calyx crater, Attic rf. Tessin, Private. - ARV 1470, 164: Group G; Isler-Kerényi, C., in An- tidoron J. Thimme (1983) 95-100 fig. 5. - About 350 B.C. - B: Young H. with club and chlamys leads a bearded Dionysos (?) with thyrsos, both wreathed, in a scheme resembling Dionysos leading Hephaistos (who this may be). Nike overhead. Three maenads, a satyr. A has young Dionysos in panther chariot.

3215.* Calyx crater, South Italian rf. Boston, MFA 1921.272. - 4th cent. B.C. - Young H. seated on cloak, with club, faced by a standing youth (Dionysos ?) with ivy crown holding two spears (?). Above H. a three-column building (? cf. 1368-1374). At l. a mae- nad with tympanon and branch, a satyr with phiale. At r. a satyr.

3. Herakles and satyrs

Cf. also satyrs attending him in his shrine (1369-1372*; cf. 1330 with maenad), sacrificing be- fore his image (1097* = 1392), with H. at music (1473. 1474. 1476), crowning H. (1514*), serving him at feast (1511*-1515; cf. 1521*), attending H. riding on centaur (1580), attending (1873. 2725) or imitating (2736) his Labours.

3216. Skyphos fr., Attic bf. Nauplion Mus. From Tiryns. - AntW 6/2, 1975, 28 fig. 6. - About 500 B.C. - H. in lionskin with club, preceded by piping satyr.

3218. Cup, Attic rf. Berlin (West), Staatl. Mus. F 2534. From Vulci. - ARV 286, 25: P. of Louvre 456; Add 294; CVA 2 pl. 100, 4; Brommer, Satyrs 34 no. 65. - 470-460 B.C. - I: H. seated on rock on li- onskin holding club, quiver and bow at side, raising a kantharos to his lips. Before him, satyr with jug. (A-B = Bousiris 2.)

3219.* Cup, Attic rf. Oxford, Ashm. Mus. 1943.52. - ARV 286 top: recalls P. of Athens 1237; Ashm. Report 1943 pl. 1; Brommer, Satyrs 34 no. 61c. - 470-450 B.C. - H. in lionskin kneels holding cup and club, quiver and bow hang. A satyr extends a hand to him.

Cf. the bell crater by the same painter, Madrid 11031 (ARV<sup>2</sup> 1410, 26).

3223. Bell crater, Apulian rf. Bern, Schlaepfer Coll. - RVAp I 246, 165 pl. 80, 3, 4: Schlaepfer P. - 370-350 B.C. - Young H. stands with club and cup, being crowned by a woman who holds a situla. Before him a satyr practises with his bow.

3224. Hydria, Lucanian rf. London, Freud Mus. 4400. - LCS Suppl. 3, 181, 113a: Foundling Group; Burn, L., in Sigmund Freud and Art (1989) 87. - About 350 B.C. - Seated young H. wreathed, in lionskin, holds out cup to a satyr who holds a jug and strainer. Other Lucanian rf. with H. and cup, and satyr piping: Reggio Calabria 7003 (LCS 63, 607).

3225. Bell crater, Campanian rf. Agrigento, Mus. Reg. R 207. - LCS 505, 480 pl. 198, 1; APZ P.; AuA 10, 1961, pl. 21, 39. - 330-320 B.C. - Young H. seated on lionskin. Satyr piping behind him, woman with tray before. Another Campanian rf. with H. and piping satyr is Palermo 1075 (LCS 260, 231).

3226. Calyx crater, Sicilian rf. London market. - LCS Suppl. 3, 98, 46: Himera Group; Christies 31 May 1979 no. 271 (ill.); Ede, C., Greek Pottery from S. Italy 7, 1979, no. 6. - 400-370 B.C. - Young naked H. carries crater and club, preceded by maenad with tympanon and satyr with torch and thyrsos; a goose.

3228.* Chous, Paestan rf. Münster, Univ. 751. - Stähler, K., AntK 20, 1977, 61-66 pl. 15; Boreas 1, 1978, 193 pl. 35, 2; Heroen und Götter der Gr. (1980) 82 no. 30. - 340-330 B.C. - Young H. with lionskin and club approaches papposilen seated on rock holding a staff and a knotted fillet. Between them a tripod on a pillar.

4. Herakles asleep is robbed by satyrs

H. is robbed also by Pans (3498), Erotes (3419-3431), and, awake, by satyrs while he supports the heavens for Atlas (2687), rising from his pyre (2916; cf. 2919), and of a cake while feasting with Dionysos (1506 = Dionysos 582*), and cf. 1371. The satyr with sheathed sword on a cup, Riehen, Hoek Coll. (Beazley 7 fig. 1) need not be relevant. More likely excerpts from this episode are: the stamnos, Leningrad 813 (Beazley 10), satyr with bow, quiver and club; Boston 64.2032 (ARV<sup>2</sup> 285, 2; Para 355), satyr-player with sword and quiver; intaglio, Baltimore 42.461 (Boardman, AGGems no. 336 pl. 24; GGFR pl. 376), satyr drawing bow, with Sotadean kantharos; and cf. 3223, above.

3230.* Psykter, Attic bf. Brussels, Mus. Roy. A 1312. From Athens. - CVA 3 pl. 27 (121), 4. - About 500 B.C. - A: Satyr stoops over recumbent H.; satyr runs with arrow and sword. B: Satyr kneels with arrow; satyr runs with arrow and quiver.

3231. Lekythos, Attic bf. wg. Montpellier, Mus. Fabre 455. - Beazley fig. 6. - 500-490 B.C. - H. naked, asleep on rock, club by him, lionskin overhead. Four satyrs dance, two each with arrows and sword.

3236. Cup, Attic rf. Ferrara, Mus. Naz. 15365 (T 269 C VP). From Spina. - ARV<sup>2</sup> 1270, 15: Codrus P.; Add<sup>2</sup> 356; Beazley fig. 7. - About 430 B.C. - Young H. (no attributes) half-seated, a satyr pulling at the cloak he sits on. Other satyrs (four on B) carry his quiver, club, bow and lionskin.

3237. Bell crater fr. Attic rf. Cyrene Mus. From Cyrene. - McPhee pl. 15, 4, 5. - Early 4th cent. B.C. - (a) part of H. apparently recumbent or seated and asleep, with a figure removing his club. (b) part of two satyrs, one with bow and spear. Since H. on (a) is wreathed, he may be sleeping at table.

3238. Lebes, Peucetian. Bari, Mus. Arch 6209. From near Bari. - McPhee pl. 16; Brommer, Satyrsplele<sup>2</sup> no. 73. - 4th cent. B.C. - H. naked, asleep by a rock, his bow, quiver, club beside him, approached by a satyr. Three other satyrs prepare a feast.

5. Herakles threatens, pursues or captures satyrs

Cf. his defence of Hera on the Brygos P. cup (3348). On the vases listed here he threatens at a feast (3239), beats (3240), leads them bound (3241, 3245), chases them (3242-3244) where one has his quiver (3243), another a tripod (3244), and shoots at them (3342).

3239.* Skyphos, Attic bf. Naples, Mus. Naz. H 2468. - ABV 703: Theseus P.; Haspels, ABL 249, 6; Buschor, E., Satyrtänze (1943) fig. 56; Brommer, Satyrsplele<sup>2</sup> no. 81. - About 500 B.C. - A: H. reclines with drinking horn, raises his club at a satyr kneeling before him; quiver and bow hang. B: As A, H. looking the other way, holding his club. Cf. the eye cup, Dallas, Mus. 1972.5, where H. reclining reaches for a sword on A looking round to B where H. reclining is served by a satyr (Group of Walters 48.42).

GREEK

Close association begins in the Archaic period when Dionysos and H. feast together (1500-1505). Dionysos is also commonly present on Olympian occasions involving H. H. may appear in an almost wholly Dionysiac setting on Attic vases from about 500 (3209-3215) or served by satyrs alone (3216-3222), the later versions of which (3221, 3222) are Dionysiac varieties of H. holding court. The theme is taken up on S. Italian vases (3223-3228). Closer comradeship is expressed in the gesture on 3207, where both suffer from the effects of wine. H. has become quite helpless on the Sicilian rf. vase 3227 and the popular later motif of the drunken H. supported by a satyr appears on the Calene 3229. For an introduction of Dionysos to Olympus modelled on that of H. see → Athena 485* (Carpenter 99-104 pl. 27).

The presence of a satyr at H.'s fight with the lion and bull on 1873 is presumably no more than an indication of the rural setting, and observed in some other scenes of Labours (e.g. 2127). Scenes with H. asleep being robbed by satyrs of his arms appear on Attic vases from the late 6th cent. to about 430 (3230-3236, cf. 3243) or later (3237). The piper on 3232 (and satyr-player with sword and quiver on Boston 64.2032, ARV<sup>2</sup> 285, 2) suggest a stage origin for the subject. On 3234 and 3236 H. is young, which could suggest that the occasion was after his fight with the Lion, which leaves him weary elsewhere in art (e.g., the Olympia metope 1919). Simon makes this point well, and cites the Leon satyr-play by Aeschylus as a possible source; she also sees the dead lion on 3234, not the skin, but this seems less likely. The episode also recalls the story of the semi-bestial Kerkopes who stole H.'s weapons and were bound by him, and the satyrs might be acting their story, but are often more than two. H. drives them away from his feast (3239) where theft may not be their intention (but cf. 1506), but they are light-fingered on other occasions (cf. introduction to section 4). H.'s pursuit and capture of satyrs (3240-3242) need not relate to the arms theft since they are not generally shown with arms (except 3243) and it is a theme that lingers on to S. Italian vases (3244, 3245). Whether theft is intended on the Peucetian 3238 is not clear; they seem rather to be preparing a feast for him. When Pans attack they take food too (3498). Cf. the Hermes leading bound satyrs on Münster 784 (Boreas, 2, 1979, pls. 21, 22). H.'s chastisement of a satyr on the Hellenistic ivory hilt (3245a) seems an isolated group of uncertain mythological context. Dionysos feasts below H.'s apotheosis on 2927.

ROMAN

In Roman art H.'s role at the thiasos or in the triumphal procession is generally that of the drunken guest. Pompeian paintings introduce most of the themes but the main types are only established with the rich series of sarcophagi and mosaics of the 2nd/

3rd cent. Where there is a feast (3253, 3254) the setting is often described as a drinking contest, but this is not made explicit in art or literature, and the most we may assume is that H. was less able to resist the effects of wine than Dionysos. He is most commonly shown in a drunken state being supported by satyrs, sometimes with the help of a dressed woman (3261, 3262) or Pan (3259, 3264, 3271, 3283). Upright, and supported mainly from behind, he adopts a pose which can be traced back, via the Calene 3229, to 5th cent. groups of Dionysos and Hephaistos in a similar condition (→ Hephaistos 122*). But he may also appear falling forward (3261-3268) and then he is usually seizing the dress of a near-naked maenad before him. This is a group which is detected also in scenes of H. with Auge (→ Auge; and Section VI, Auge). H. is always naked (except 3278), often wreathed and sometimes with a garland round his neck (as 3263). He clutches his cup, or it has fallen to the ground. His club (or quiver) may be picked up by a satyr (3264, 3266, 3267, 3269) who may ride ahead with it (3278). There are odd variants on the group, with a satyr's impolite treatment of H. on 3261, or a dressed woman supporting H. or being attacked (3261, cf. 3262). Sometimes H. has fallen to the ground (3270, 3271). Otherwise he may dance (3287, 3291; → Dionysos/Bacchus [in per. or.] 127, 128), carry a torch (3269) or thyrsos (3274) or cymbals (3273). There are several simpler groups, removed from the fuller scenes, but on these a satyr with torch twice accompanies H. (3280, 3289).

Occasionally H. stands by in more sober presence (3272, 3275) and it is in this role, as an equal or companion to the god, that he appears on the god's chariot (3256) or in a chariot of his own. This is the spirit of other scenes where they are alone together (3246-3252), where shared cult may also be suggested (the coins 3249-3252). He shares herms with Dionysos and Demeter, 1213, 1214 (= Dionysos 535*, 536), and with Dionysos alone (1208).

H. Herakles and Hades/Plouton/Pluto

H. has occasion to confront Hades in his katabasis to recover Kerberos (Section IV, M), to free Theseus (Section XI), to recover → Alkestis, to recover Laodameia (2799). He was one of H.'s divine adversaries at Pylos, where H. wounded him (Hom. Il. 5, 395-397; Pind. O. 9, 33-35). See also → Hades, Lit. Sources. For scenes of H. with an old man carrying a cornucopia, and previously identified as Plouton, see H. and Palaimon (Section X), where some scenes still defy certain identification (see Commentary ibid. and → Hades 68-74). H. attends Hades' rape of Persephone on the sarcophagus, → Hades 19. See Brommer, Herakles II 103-104. JOHN BOARDMAN

J. Herakles and Hebe

→ Hebe (I), the child of Zeus and Hera, is given in marriage to H. to live on Olympus and enjoy its feasts in eternal youth.

LITERARY SOURCES: From the lines added (in the 6th cent.) to Homer (Od. 11, 602-604) and Hesiod (theog. 950-955) on, writers are unanimous that Hebe was H.'s last wife (→ Hebe I) and it is thus that Zeus' bastard son becomes adopted by Hera (Diod. 4, 39, 2-3). Only Apollod. (bibl. 2 [160] 7, 7) gives them two children, Alexiades and Aniketos. H. appears at Hebe's side when she rejuvenates → Iolaos (Eur. Heraklidae 843-866).

I. Scenes of apotheosis

In scenes of the apotheosis of H., especially those with the chariot, a woman is commonly shown, in various positions vis-à-vis H. or the chariot: in front of it welcoming H. (3296, 3297, 3301-3303), alongside accompanying it (3300), or on it beside H. (3294, 3295). She supplies the atmosphere of hospitality, modesty and charm appropriate to the harmonious environment to which H. is introduced, by her attitude (lowered head, 3300; hand raised to mouth, 3297, 3302, 3312; the shoulder of her dress raised, 3301) and attributes (flower, 3303; crown, 3313; fillet, 3299). But these are characteristics that abet anonymity and can lead to reduplication of figures, so it is a delicate and perhaps bold task to name the women that accompany H. There are few grounds for identifying Hebe except through inscriptions (3296, 3305), position (3297, 3304, 3309), function (3306) or attribute. But this seems justified where she takes H.'s hand (3292) or the reins (3293-3295) or is at feast on Olympus beside him (3313), and where the figure is clearly not Athena or Nike. Otherwise the circumstances of the story recommend such a feminine presence as the personification of Youthfulness which guarantees H.'s new status and happiness as a god. See also → Hebe I.

d) Other scenes

Hebe attends Hera suckling H. on → Hera 301. The woman attending a H. Mousikos might be taken for Hebe, especially when holding a sceptre (as MuM Auktion 56, 1980, pl. 33, 83) or flower (1443*).

3313.* (= 2935) Two relief phialai, tin. New York, MMA 39.11.4, 47.11.9. From Spina. - Late 5th cent. B.C. - Feast with reclining gods (Aphrodite, Ares, Dionysos, Ariadne, Apollo), with H. (young) leaning on his club and Hebe (himation around legs) presenting him a phiale and crown. Outer frieze, chariots attending H.'s apotheosis.

2. Scenes of homage to Herakles

The identity of Hebe is clearer, from her proximity to H. (3314, 3315) or her complementary position vis-à-vis Athena (3318, 3322, 3328) and Nike (3323-3327). She is always a welcoming figure offering a crown (3318, 3323, 3325, 3327) or fillet (3320, 3322) but also reveals her role as a symbol of concord by her attendance at dexiosis scenes of H. and Athena (3314, 3315) and as libation carrier (3321, 3324). She is par excellence the libation partner of H. on Olympos to whom she offers phiale (3324) or kantharos (3321).

c) In scenes on reliefs and rf. vases (see 1368-1380) with H. beside a pillared shrine peculiar to him, a woman is shown offering a libation to H. (e.g., 1373, 1374, 1376). This might be Hebe though the setting seems terrestrial.

3. Marriage; Herakles and Hebe as a couple

With gods present Hebe can be mistaken for no other bride of H. and she is four times named (3330-3333). The event is linked to apotheosis and the symbolic chariot often appears with a connotation either of marriage or of apotheosis; it is not always clear which (3334). The simpler, intimate scenes are less easy to interpret and the woman might be variously identified (3341) even in the presence of Aphrodite and Eros (3342). The presence of Zeus and Hera can guarantee the identity of Hebe on 3343. See also the double herm, 1209.

COMMENTARY

H.'s association with Hebe demonstrates his divine status. It is shown normally in scenes of the apotheosis, on foot (3304-3307) or by chariot (3292-3303), of life on Olympus (3308, 3309, 3311, 3312) and of the marriage (3330-3340).

A number of other scenes are more difficult to locate, showing Hebe beside H. Mousikos (see section 1, d) or in a hieron (section 2, c). They are not concerned with showing whether the setting is terrestrial or not, but to demonstrate H.'s divinity, one of the guarantees of which is Hebe herself. Even with the hieron building, the scenes are not so unlike those of homage to H. (3316-3329) where a column (3327), and one (3317, 3319) or even three (3326) altars may appear, or where a bullock appears between Athena and H.

Unexpectedly, scenes of the marriage appear first, in Greek island art (3330, within the 7th cent.), then in Corinth (3331), and continue into the early imperial period (3337) which is when the iconography of Hebe also disappears. This becomes the traditional way of showing H.'s place with the Olympians. Archaic Athens develops a different scheme, with the apotheosis in a chariot, from about 560 to 500 B.C.

The scenes of H. with Hebe achieve varying degrees of intimacy (3313, 3341-3343) but their main function is to glorify H. Athena (3318-3324, 3328, 3329) and Nike (3319, 3323-3327) may also attend. Hebe's role is to demonstrate the grandeur of Olympus, holding a sceptre (3317, 3326, 3337) or, the definitive welcome for H. among the gods, offering him the libation that seals his right to join them (3306, 3313, 3316, 3317, 3321, 3324).

K. Herakles and Hephaistos

Hephaistos made armour and equipment for H.: see LIMC IV p. 729. On a Hellenistic relief cup he is making H.'s club, which is handed to the hero by Athena (→ Athena 57* = Hephaistos II). See Brommer, Herakles II 107.

L. Herakles and Hera

Although Hera's hostility to H. looms large in the hero's myth, it does not appear to have caught the attention of figurative artists. Hera is very rarely represented with H. and when she is, relations between the two appear to be entirely cordial. They appear together in scenes which show Hera suckling H., and of H. protecting Hera from an attack by satyrs. See → Hera, section II C, 3 for literary sources on her enmity.

1. Hera suckles Herakles

Despite the fact that Hera became H.'s enemy even before he was born, she once (probably unknowingly) gave him her breast and thus provided him with her divine milk.

LITERARY SOURCES: Lykophron (1327-1328; Schol. 39, 1327, 1328) is the earliest source alluding to Hera nourishing H. at her breast. Eratosth. kat. 44 says that the sons of Zeus had no honour unless they had been suckled by Hera and that Hermes brought H. to Hera. While he was drinking Hera shook him off, thereby creating the Milky Way. Diod. 4, 9, 6 says that after → Alkmene had exposed H., Athena and Hera passed the spot where the baby lay and Athena persuaded Hera to give him her breast. The lusty child sucked so hard that Hera pushed him away; the milk thus spilled became the Milky Way. Paus. 9, 25, 2 comments on the place where the Thebans said Zeus deceived Hera into suckling the infant H. Hyg. astr. 2, 43 quotes a tradition that H. was put to Hera's breast while she was asleep.

COMMENTARY

Although the subject of the suckling of H. was known in Greece it seems to have found little favour with artists on the mainland. The one vase that seems surely to illustrate this theme comes from South Italy (3344) and H. is not shown on it as a baby, which we might have expected from the sources, but a young child already steady on his feet. The Etruscans show him older still (→ Herakles/Hercle 400–404) and the subject was more popular among them, often conflated with Hera's ultimate adoption of H. in connection with his apotheosis.

No extant literary source mentions Hera attacked by satyrs and defended by H. Simon (o.c. 3348) suggests that the Attic vase painting has been inspired by a satyr play on the subject, while she feels that the goddess in the metope (3348a) is protectress rather than protected (JdI 82, 1967, 290–291). Whatever the story may have been, it seems that visual artists are here again showing H. and his step-mother on friendly terms – a contrast with the picture given in literature. Thus, H.'s deeds are prominent on her «Treasury» at Foce del Sele (= [Dodekathlos] 1698). She is often present at his introduction to Olympus (see Commentary on Section VIII) and at Olympian assemblies. In some scenes she seems to show her dislike for him (e.g., 3177 = Hera 467; cf. 2857).

Hera sends Iris with the Nemean lion to test H. on an Attic bf. vase (1915). That she is present on the Campanian rf. scene of H. with Atlas (→ Atlas 13*, = Hera 457) is highly improbable.

M. Herakles and Hermes/Mercury

See also → Hermes 497–568. 586–589. Hermes commonly attends many of H.'s Labours and other exploits in Greek art, especially in late Attic bf., notably Kerberos (Section IV, M, in which Hermes plays a role), Antaios (→ Antaios I 2*–14* passim), Acheloo (→ Acheloo 248*–251*), and less often in the encounter with the Hydra, Boar, Bull and with the Hesperides. He is also often a companion of H. in his role as intermediary between earth, Olympus and Hades (e.g. → Hades 129, and the possible scene with Alkestis [→ Alkestis 58* = Hermes 586]). H. and Hermes may feast together (1495–1499, and cf. → Hermes 499). Hermes carries the infant H. (1665*), attends H. in his shrine (1369. 1370*. 1378*) or helps him at an altar (1330. 1391*), joins him in music-making (1475*) and fishing (3369), and cf. 1321*. 1322*.

From the Hellenistic period on they are often associated in cult, both being gods of the palaestra, and there are H./Hermes double herms (1205–1207); cf. RESuppl. III 1100–1101 and MLI 2, 2961. Aristides 40, 19 Keil mentions common images, «they achieve such a degree of comradeship». For a Hermerakles see 926a. b, and cf. 591*.

For their appearance on South Italian vases see Schauenburg, K., AuA 10, 1961, 83. See Brommer, Herakles II 109–110.

COMMENTARY

Williams identified the central object on 3350 as a gaming table. If it alludes to the only other such tables on scenes of this date – between Achilles and Ajax (LIMCI pls. 96–102) – and if these allude to Pisistratus' return to Athens (Boardman, J., AJA 82, 1978, 18–24), the scene may take on something of a (re)introduction of H./Pisistratus to Athens. Other representations suggest no specific mythological situation, though the olive branches held on the South Italian vases (3352. 3355) and the phialai on 3356 are notable.

N. Herakles and Poseidon

Poseidon helps defend Pylos when H. attacks, and H. «wields his club against the trident» (Pind. O. 9, 29–31). Several of H.'s adversaries are Poseidon's children or kin – → Bousiris, → Antaios, → Nereus, → Triton, and his sometime rival/friend Theseus was Poseidon's son. He also kills Poseidon's ketos (see → Hesione). Poseidon seldom attends with other gods on Heraklean occasions (→ Ares 80*). It is not clear whether Poseidon is officiating for Zeus in welcoming H. to Olympus on the Attic bf. vases (2865. 2866). On the Attic bf. Kolchos oinochoe Poseidon reacts vigorously behind and in favour of (?) H. and Athena against Ares (→ Ares 42; Rumpf, A., Sakonides (1937. 1976) pls. 29–31; Berlin F 1732). They share a late votive relief from Thasos, 276, and their statues are juxtaposed on a sarcophagus, 1296. See Brommer, Herakles II 114–115.

COMMENTARY

The fishing party on 3369 is unexplained. H.'s adversary on 3370 looks more like Poseidon than Ne-reus, but we cannot be sure, and this is the only possible scene of the confrontation at Pylos.

O. Herakles and Zeus/Jupiter

For Zeus as H.'s father see LIMC IV p. 728; and Zeus receiving H. into Olympus, Section VIII. For H. fighting beside Zeus in the gigantomachy see → Gigantes and Section IX, R. There are few other confrontations, none in the setting of myth. Zeus intervenes in H.'s fight with Ares over → Kyknos (I), and with Apollo over the tripod (Section IX, B). In Greek examples the Zeus might be a king and in the Roman the setting is of cult. H. shares few sanctuaries with Zeus (RE Suppl. III 1102-1103). For H. and Ammon see → Ammon 153. 154*. ## COMMENTARY

The scene on 3371 is to be related to contemporary introductions to Olympus, but the handshake is more than a welcome and unique in this context. Panofka thought 3372 showed H. Kallinikos delivering the olive from the Hyperboreans, to serve as prize at Olympia, to Zeus Basileus. He associates also other scenes of H. and a branch (3148. 3355). In the phlyax scene (3373) H. seems decidedly to be eating offerings intended for Zeus.

The frequent appearance of H. and Jupiter on coins of the Tetrarchic period (3381-3383. 3385) is due to their role as protectors of the Augusti, introduced by Diocletian (Jupiter) and Maximianus Herculeus (H.).

P. Herakles with the assembled gods

H. fights beside the gods against the giants (see next Section and → Gigantes). Though a newcomer to Olympus he is often shown in the company of the gods, especially in Archaic Athens and in Roman art. His usual companion is Athena/Minerva. See also → Dodekathēoi.

LITERARY SOURCES: See Section IX, J for H.'s marriage on Olympus and Section VIII for the apotheosis. There are few anecdotes about his behaviour with the gods. Kall. h. 3, 145-160 has him take Apollo's role waiting at the gates for Artemis to return from hunting, anxious to get at the game, and still a glutton. He was not formally regarded as a «thirteenth» Olympian but rather as a supernumerary.

COMMENTARY

In the 6th cent. assemblies on Attic bf. vases the gods are often all seated (3386, 3388) but later many or all stand (3387, 3389-3392). H. is prominently placed beside Zeus on 3386 (and cf. 3394), otherwise he is usually paired with Athena. He wears himation only when seated (3386, 3388) and on the Late Archaic 3392, but is fully dressed when standing (possibly with himation over lionskin on 3387) as though just arrived. Given his importance in Archaic Athens it may be that H. is the raison d'être for many of these scenes, but there is probably no suggestion of recent arrival when he appears at Hellenistic Magnesia (3396). He incongruously joins the gods attending the birth of Athena on two bf. vases (→ Athena 335, 349 = Apollon 819c*), and, more appropriately, that of Aphrodite on the Phidian throne of Zeus at Olympia (3395). In Roman art his appearance with the Olympians is in accord with his status in Roman religion. His relegation to the floor, in his familiar older reclining position, at the feast on 3402 is noteworthy. Athena/Minerva remains his usual companion.

In Gallia/Germania he often appears with three or more other gods on the bases or base and shaft of the «Jupiter columns» of the 1st-3rd cent. A. D. (cf. Müller, W., Die Jupitergigantensäulen und ihre Verwandten [1975]; Bauchhenß, G./Noelke, P., Die Jupitersäulen in den germanischen Provinzen, BonnJbb Beih. 41 [1981]).

Q. Herakles holds court

The subject isolated here is a popular one on 4th cent. (and latest 5th) Attic vases. «Herakles sitting, often with a kantharos in his hand, among his well-wishers - Athena, Nike, Hermes, Iolaos, satyrs, maenads» (Beazley, EVP 71). Sometimes other deities attend, and occasionally H. is not seated.

leaning on a stick. («Hesperides and Atlas?» - Beazley).

COMMENTARY

Athena, Nike and Hermes commonly attend these groups. Among the anonymous men may be Iolaos or the Dioskouroi (3403, 3406, 3408) and among the women, Hebe (3410). Other figures could be mortal. Activities explicit or implied include crowning and libation. There are similar groups around H. at his columnar shrine (1368-1374) and cf. here 3407 (and 3403) with tripod and altar. Satyrs lurk in the wings on 3405 and in comparable groups (3221, 3222) the Dionysiac thiasos is dominant. Where similar schemes include a certain Zeus or possibly Hebe (3321-3328) we may be sure the setting is Olympus but the general atmosphere of most of these scenes is of the honouring of H. by gods, heroes, and, it seems, mortals, in an undefined setting. H. may be shown young (rejuvenated) or (less often) old. The vase scenes probably reflect popular Herakles icons in which his status is revealed by the company he keeps. The mainly naked H. seated on dress or lionskin and with his club on his lap is the dominant type.

R. Herakles in Gigantomachia

See → Gigantes, especially Commentary, section 2, 1 and 2. H.'s participation guarantees the gods' success and he is invariably shown in a prominent position, close to Zeus or Athena, in all general scenes of gigantomachy, but is not shown in an isolated duel, as most of the gods may be, until the post-Classical period.

ADDITIONAL BIBLIOGRAPHY: Mele, N. V., «Eracle euboico a Cuma - La Gigantomachia e la Via Heraclea», in Recherches sur les cultes grecs et l'occident 1 (Cahiers du centre Jean Bérard 5, 1979) 19-51; Vollkommer 40-41.

On Attic bf. vases H. fights from Zeus' chariot, with Athena at hand, or from Athena's chariot. He is always a Bowman except on a few late bf. vases where he is beside Athena on the chariot and carrying a club, no doubt influenced by other scenes in which he shares a chariot with the goddess for his apotheosis journey to Olympus. Exceptionally, on a bf. dinos of about 560 B. C. (Malibu 81.AE.211, = Gigantes 171*), he is fighting with a sword, against a giant → Pankrates. (The drawing of this vase in LIMC IV, taken from GettyVases 2, 1985, 26-27, needs correction in many respects, partly from additional fragments, and especially since ibid. 38 fig. 19 below joins 36 fig. 17 top r., giving an Athena fighting with a sword.) For H.'s later associations with a Pankrates see 1381-1384*. His only other named opponent of the Archaic period is Thourios, on the Amyklai throne (= [Dodekathlos] 1701), but beside Zeus and Athena he may confront Enkelados, Perichthonios and Porphyrior (→ Gigantes 105, 116, 119?). He confronts a giant (?) Gagenes on a Boeotian bf. vase (Louvre MNC 743, → Ares 44* = Gagenes 1*) in the presence of Ares and Athena.

On Attic rf. vases H. no longer fights on the chariot, and in post-Classical scenes his normal weapon is the club. H. appears in an individual duel with an anguiped giant on gems of the 2nd-1st cent. B.C. (→ Gigantes 66-71; 69 is Walters BMGems no. 1043) and cf. the later stele, → Gigantes 535.

Apollo. bibl. 1 (36-38) 6, 1-2 has him kill Porphyron, helping Apollo kill Ephialtes, and shooting all the giants as they lay dying. JOHN BOARDMAN

X. Herakles with other figures of cult or myth

AFRICA

H. also attends Africa, with Aphrodite, Eros and Psyche, on a Severan relief vase from Timgad (→ Africa 44*).

AKADEMOS (OR DEMOS)

ASKLEPIOS

H. built Asklepios a temple at Amyklai (Paus. 3, 19, 7) and the god healed his wound in a cave on Taygetos (Paus. 3, 20, 5). See also → Cheiron 101*, a Roman bronze group of H., Asklepios and a centaur holding a cornucopia; 2941.

ANTIOCHOS

3413. (= 275, = Antiochos 6*) Marble relief (honorific decree for taxiarch). Athens, NM 3491. From Athens, Kynosarges. - Kron, Phylenheroen 192-193 pl. 28, 1. - 330-320 B.C. - A man with himation and staff; young H. with club and lionskin. The decree is of the tribe Antiochis and the man is most probably the tribal hero.

CONCORDIA

3414.* (= Homonoia/Concordia 101 with bibl.) AU aureus, Rome, Maximian, A.D. 306-307. - Rev.: Concordia extends r. hand to H., leaning on his club.

DEI FLUVII

Cf. also → Belos 4, H. seated beside Phoenician river god Belos, where he was healed of wounds received from the Hydra; and below, 3505. And H.

with a river god on coins of Temenothyrai (Phrygia), of Salonina (→ Hippourios 3; but not necessarily fighting him since he does not raise his club but holds it at ease; he could be assisting him).

3415. (= Baetis 1*, = Hedone 2 with bibl.) AU aureus, Rome, Hadrian, A.D. 119-122. - BMC Emp III 254, 99 pl. 48, 19. - H. between two women in distyle temple, with club. Below, a river god (Baetis) (a head on RIC no. 60) and prow (a fish on RIC no. 61). The temple of H. at Gades and Hesperides (?).

3416. (= 480 with bibl., = Baetis 3*) AU aureus, Rome, Hadrian, A.D. 119-122. - BMC Emp III 273, 274 pl. 51, 21. - H. with apple, ship's prow, river god (Baetis). Inscribed HERC. GADIT.

DIOSKOUROI

The Dioskouroi have a comparable hero/god status to that of H. Their statues could be associated (Aristeides 40, 20 Keil). They appear often in scenes with H. on Attic vases of the latest 5th and 4th centuries: in scenes of initiation at Eleusis (1401*. 1402. 1408*; cf. → Dioskouroi 169*. 170); in the scene of apotheosis on the Bakys crater of about 400 B.C. (2871); in scenes of H. «holding court» (e.g., 3325. 3403. 3406. 3408. 3474), to which may be added the following. See also Vollkommer 55.

EOS/AURORA

EROS

H. was frequently subject to the power of Eros; his gluttony for love matched his gluttony for food. Nevertheless no extant literary source seems to link the figures of H. and Eros. The connection appears to have been made rather more explicitly in the visual arts (whence the epigrams Anth. Pal. 16, 103. 104) which describe a statue of H. by Lysippos showing H. bereft of his club, lionskin and quiver and explain that Eros has stripped the hero of his arms - though there is no suggestion that a statue of Eros with the equipment of H. was also made by Lysippos. (Such figures of Eros had, however, become common by the time the poems were composed; see → Eros 950-954; → Eros/Amor 613-615.)

H. is portrayed alone with Eros (or Erotes) in a number of situations: H. carrying Eros or with Eros perched upon his shoulder; Eros with H. who has his hands bound behind his back; Erotes playing with or stealing the hero's equipment when H. is asleep, feasting or reclining in the presence of Omphale; or H. and Eros simply facing each other across an altar.

a) Herakles with Eros and other gods

(i) In the garden of the Hesperides

Eros often appears as an attendant figure, sometimes collecting apples from the tree. His presence no doubt contributes to the idyllic atmosphere conjured up in this scene, but is unlikely to have any more specific narrative implications. See 2703. 2719. 2721. 2722. 2724. 2725.

(ii) H. feasting

Scenes of H. reclining sometimes include Eros, less as a participant than as an adjunct. See 1030. 1508*. 1513.

(iii) H. with a woman

Eros occasionally mediates between H. and a woman in scenes that suggest H.'s marriage to Hebe. See 1525. 1528*.

Sometimes other gods are shown in scenes where the presence of Eros may suggest the marriage of H. and Hebe. See 3329. 3336. 3340. 3342; and cf. 1692 (= Eros 640d).

For Eros between H. and Nemea (?) see 1920.

(iv) Other scenes

Eros sometimes appears in scenes which show H. with other gods (e.g. Athena, Nike) or in connection with his apotheosis. See 2925; → Eros 913*. 913a.

b) Eros/Erotes play with or steal Herakles' equipment

→ Eros/Amor 616-618.

(i) H. reclines naked, feet to the left

3419.* Marble relief fr. Brunswick, Bowdoin College 1906.2. - Herbert, K., Ancient Art in Bowdoin College (1964) no. 75 pl. 7; Scharmer no. 11 fig. 9. - 3rd-1st cent. B.C. - H. lies asleep while four Erotes steal his club and wine. One rests the club on his shoulders, while another rises from his crouched position to take its weight on his back; a third carries off the tiny oinochoe and a fourth leans over into the wine cup held in H.'s l. hand.

3420. Plaster relief. Hildesheim, Pel.-Mus. 1125. From Memphis. - Adriani, Rep A II (1961) no. 199 pl. 94, 310; Scharmer no. 19; Reinsberg, C., Stud. zur hell. Toreutik (1980) fig. 104. - Probably Hellenistic original. - H. reaches out his r. hand towards an Eros who appears from behind his r. thigh (compare 3421. 3422).

3422. Wall painting. From Pompeii IX 8, 3 and 6 (43), Casa del Centenario. - Scheffold, WP 280; Loewy, E., RM 12, 1897, 144 fig. 1; Scharmer no. 16. - 1st cent. A.D. - H. supports himself on his l. hand, lying on his lionskin in a landscape. He grasps the arm of an Eros behind his thigh (like the one in 3420. 3421); another leaps onto his shoulder from the r. The pose of H. is very similar to that on 3421.

3423. (= Eros/Amor, Cupido 620*) Clay relief medallion. Nîmes, Mus. de la Maison Carrée. From Nîmes. - Willeumier/Audin, Médailles 21 no. 2; Scharmer no. 18. - Mid 1st cent. A.D. - H. turns his head to look at an Eros at r. Another, standing by his feet, holds his bow. In front, two Erotes carry his club. H. holds a cup; a tree behind him.

3424. (= 1032, = Eros/Amor Cupido 619*) Marble sarcophagus relief. Rome, Villa Doria Pamphilj. - SarkRel III 1 no. 142 pl. 43; Scharmer no. 28 fig. 11; Calza, R., et al., Antichità di Villa Doria Pamphilj (1977) no. 183 pl. 115. - A.D. 200-250. - H., club in r. hand, cup in l.; two Erotes beside him, one clutching his club. Victories flanking.

3425. Glass intaglio. Berlin, Staatl. Mus. FG 1327. - Furtwängler, Beschreibung pl. 15, 1327. - Roman. - H. holds a cup while Eros flies above him carrying his club. Similar are Berlin FG 1326. 4208. 4209.

3426. Glass intaglio. Berlin, Staatl. Mus. FG 4210. - Furtwängler, Beschreibung pl. 31, 4210. - Roman. - H. has apparently fallen asleep while dining; Eros carries his club away.

3428.* Marble table leg. Bonn, Akad. Kunstmus. B 291. - Himmelmann, N., BonnJbb 1977, 642-643 fig. 15; idem, Das akad. Kunstmus. der Univ. Bonn (1984) 104 no. 48. - Early 4th cent. A.D. - H. reclines naked, holding cup. Behind him Erotes (three?) lift his club. Cf. also Paphos Mus. 2956, Ann. Rept. Dept. Ant. for 1987, fig. 91.

(ii) Young H. reclines dressed, with Omphale

For other scenes which show Eros in the presence of H. and Omphale see → Omphale.

Wall paintings

3429. Naples, Mus. Naz. 9000. From Pompeii VII Is. Occid. 15. - Scharmer no. 13; Bastet, F. L., BullAnt-Besch 44, 1969, 146 fig. 3; Scheffold, WP 209. - A.D. 50-60. - H., feet to l. at lower r.; several Erotes carry off his equipment; four in the centre deal with his club. Omphale, with two attendants, sits at the top l. To upper r. an altar with Eros?

3430. Naples, Mus. Naz., Sala 54. From Pompeii VI 13, 6 (c) (Casa del Forno di Ferro). – Fourth Style. – Scharmer no. 14 fig. 8; Scheffold, WP 130. – A.D. 69–79. – H., feet to l. at lower r., with six Erotes, three stealing his club, one drinking from his cup, one at his head, one at his l. foot. Higher up, centre, an altar with two Erotes on it. To its l., Omphale seated (upper part missing).

3431. (= Eros/Amor, Cupido 616*) Pompeii VII 1, 25 and 47 (10) (Casa del Sirico). – Scharmer, no. 15; Bastet, o.c. 3429, 147 fig. 4; Scheffold, WP 164. – About 70 A.D. – H. feet to l. at lower r., with six Erotes, four stealing his club, one drinking from his cup, one behind his head. Altar above and to the l. of H. with four Erotes on it, playing with H.'s quiver. Upper l., Omphale seated with two attendants. Upper r. Dionysus reclining with attendants.

c) Herakles on one knee; Eros on his shoulder
H. naked, with lionskin behind him.

(i) H. brandishes his club over his and Eros' heads

(ii) H. without club

3433.* Glass intaglio. Hanover, Kestner Mus. – AGDIV pl. 47, 309. – 1st cent. B.C. – H. with his near knee on the ground (ground line possibly formed by his club), his further foot flat on the ground line, as if he were trying to rise (as in 3432). He seems to hold Eros by the hands, his further arm raised over his head, his nearer arm in front of his chest. – Similar are: a) (= Eros 612*) Onyx cameo. Naples, Mus. Naz. – Vollenweider, Steinschneidekunst pl. 27, 6–7. – 1st cent. B.C. – H. raises r. hand as if vanquished. – b) Glass, Berlin, Furtwängler, Beschreibung pl. 15, 1322. – H. is kneeling on his club; Eros holds bow and arrow. – c)* Carnelian, New York, MMA 41.160.771. – Richter, MetMusGems no. 414 pl. 51. – 1st cent. B.C./A.D. – H. with two Erotes, one on his shoulder, the other on his hip.

Also, with one Eros, Copenhagen NM, M43. Fossing, ThorvGems pl. 11, 877. Berlin, FG 1320.1321. Hanover, AGD IV pl. 121, 928/29. Cf. GlaspastenWürzb I no. 385.

kneels with l. knee on a rock to the l., with bow in r. hand and club in l.; Eros alights on his back and clasps him round the neck.

(i) H. reclining; Eros at his feet

3435. Glass intaglios. Berlin, Staatl. Mus. FG 4206. 4207. – Furtwängler, Beschreibung pl. 31, 4207. – Roman. – Eros at H.'s feet, carrying his club.

(ii) H. on one knee; Eros binding (or unbinding) his hands behind his back

3436. Glass intaglio. Berlin, Staatl. Mus. FG 1325. – Furtwängler, Beschreibung pl. 15, 1325. – Roman. – H. turns his head to look back at Eros.

(iii) H. seated, hands behind his back; Eros, behind him, binding (or releasing) him

3437.* Cornelian intaglio. Vienna, Kunsthist. Mus. IX B 656. – AGOe I pl. 46, 268; Boardman, J./La Rocca, E., Eros in Greece (1978) 160–161. – 1st cent. B.C. – H., seated on a rock covered by his lionskin, hands behind his back, turns to look at Eros who stands behind him. Cf. the simpler version on the seal-ring from Delos, RA 1988, 332 fig. 58.

(iv) H. walking, hands tied behind his back; Eros on his shoulder

3438.* (= Hedone 7) Chalcedony intaglio. Florence, Mus. Arch. 14757. – Milani, L. A., Guida (1912) pl. 135, 8; GlaspastenWürzb I no. 384. – 1st cent. B.C. – H. with lionskin over shoulder, head bent forward. Similar are Walters, BMGems pl. 16, 1224 (H. with club, bow and lionskin) and an amethyst, Cambridge, Fitz. Mus. (Hellenistic).

e) Herakles naked, walking, hands free; Eros or Erotes holding or binding his legs

COMMENTARY

Erotes proliferate on vases from the 4th cent. B.C. and so it is hardly surprising that they appear in scenes with H. and other gods. Eros' presence adds to the idyllic quality of the garden of the Hesperides, suggests the erotic aspects of H.'s match with Hebe, and extends the pleasures of the table to those of the bedroom in scenes of feasting (Section a).

The earliest representation of H. and Eros alone is on the bronze hydria in Malibu (3447), and shows H. carrying the infant Eros in an affectionate manner. Such service is performed by older gods for younger ones frequently in sculptures of the 4th cent. B.C. (e.g., Eirene with Ploutos, Hermes with Dionysus) and even earlier on vase paintings of the 5th cent. B.C.

Lysippos' statue of H. disarmed by Eros (Anth. Pal. 16, 103. 104) must have been made around the end of the 4th cent. B.C., but there is no evidence that Eros was shown with H.

The earliest representation of Eros on the shoulder of a crouching H. is of the 3rd cent. B.C. (3432). H. brandishes his club in one hand (the object of his attack is not clear) and holds Eros' hand with the other. H.'s position suggests submission, but he does not evince any hostility towards Eros. The theme, whatever its meaning, was popular with gem cutters. In a later variant (3433) H. is shown without his club. Vollenweider (Steinschneidekunst 102) interprets a cameo of this type (3433a) as showing H. forced down on one knee by Eros, making a gesture of submission with his free hand. Furtwängler holds the same opinion, and also sees the Roman gems which show H. with his hands bound behind his back, as images of Eros subduing H.

This may be true of some of the representations, for just this sort of piquant conceit was found appealing in Hellenistic and Roman times. Nevertheless, the possibility that friendly relations such as are revealed in the Malibu bronze (3447) also pertain to at least some of the gems should not be excluded. For instance, on 3433 H. is holding Eros' two hands, apparently to help him balance on the hero's shoulders in an avuncular way. Another gem (3438), in which H. is shown, hands tied behind his back, walking with Eros perched on his shoulder, is visually very close to the Malibu bronze (3447).

When H. is shown with his hands tied and Eros is behind him (3436, 3437), it is usually assumed that Eros is binding the hero's hands and thus exercising his power over him. This may well be correct, but it should be remembered that the image alone, unsupported by any literary evidence, is ambiguous, and Eros might just as well be releasing H. from his bonds (representations of Prometheus being released appear to have been more frequent than representations showing him being bound).

Images of Eros or Erotes stealing or playing with the equipment of H. were probably first created in the Hellenistic period. In their most elaborate form they appear in a Roman painting (3431) with Dionysos, Omphale and a drowsy, feasting H., whose equipment is being toyed with by Erotes. The powers of love and wine have disarmed the hero. The presence of Dionysos is unusual and the image of H. with Erotes stealing his arms seems more closely attached to Omphale, possibly fitting in with the pattern of reversal suggested by that story: man overcome by woman; mighty hero overcome by tiny deities.

The visual antecedents for the type of Omphale and H. with thieving Eros are twofold: one reaches back to scenes of the 5th cent. B. C. in which satyrs rob the sleeping H. of his arms (3230-3238) and the other to the more recent painting by Aetion (Lucian, Herod. 5) which showed the wedding of Alexander and Roxana with Eros playing amidst the armour of Alexander. One tradition prepares for the stealing of H.'s arms, the other for the representation of Eros with incongruous equipment. A third strand may have been contributed by Timanthes' painting (Plin. nat. 35, 74) where the huge size of a Cyclops is indicated by satyrs measuring his thumb with a thyrsus. The Eroses are shown tiny in contrast with the hero, and have to work as a team to lift his club.

Images of H. alone with Eroses meddling with his equipment may be abbreviations of the scene with Omphale or, more likely (as argued by Scharmer) an independent invention. Further abbreviations show Eroses without H., playing with the hero's equipment, or Eros himself alone sleeping on H.'s lionskin with the club beside him, or wearing the skin and holding the club (→ Eros/Amor, Cupido 576. 577. 613-618. 621. For an infant H. sometimes taken for a wingless Eros see 1221*-1256).

Although many images suggest that the arms of H. are being stolen by Eros (or Eroses) (Section b), in others (3444. 3448), the hero seems willing to have his equipment handled by the baby god(s).

In the absence of literary evidence, the scenes of H. and Eros are extraordinarily difficult to interpret. We can seldom be absolutely sure whether we are looking at allegories of the power of love or subtle illustrations of stories whose content eludes us.

MELEAGER (and PERSEUS)

3459. Painting by Parrhasios. Rhodes. Lost. - Plin. nat. 35, 69 (Overbeck, SQ no. 1706): in una tabula quae est Rhodi Meleagrum, Herculem, Persea. The same artist painted a H. in Lindos for which the god posed in a dream (= 1257; Athen. 12, 543f; Overbeck, SQ no. 1700) - perhaps not the same. The association of the heroes is unusual; possibly in Hades, where H. met Meleager (Pind. fig. 249a [dith. II] Snell/Maehler; Bakchyl. epin. 5, 165-175)?

B. C. - Three women (the Muses of Helikon?) beside young H. and Dionysos.

NIKE/VICTORIA

Nike is seen crowning H. frequently through the 5th and 4th cent. B. C., occasionally later. Sometimes this is the major theme but more commonly she is a minor figure rewarding H. in action or at rest or on Olympus. She also serves as his charioteer to Olympus (2922-2926) and, with negroid features, driving his centaur-chariot (1429).

COMMENTARY

For Nike as a subsidiary figure crowning H. who is engaged in other activities, or being celebrated by other figures and deities, see, e.g., 1335. 1345* (H. at sacrifice); 3129. 3139 (H. with Athena); 3403. 3405. 3407. 3410 (H.'s court) and in some Labours (e.g. 2347. 2352). As a major motif this is relatively rare on Attic vases (3460-3462) where libation is slightly commoner (3481. 3482), but very common on South Italian vases (3463-3475. 3483), a ring and a mirror (3476. 3477), where, if there is an accompanying figure, it is Iolaos, Hermes or Athena (Dioskouroi?) on 3474. 3482). It lingers on South Italian coins (3478a-c) with an unusual version at Herakleia Pontica (3478c). The Roman scenes are slight (and cf. the coins 284*. 552. 917*. 919*; and reliefs 920*. 957*. 1032). Almost all listed here could be regarded as excerpts from more populous scenes, spotlighting the victorious hero. In most there is the possibility of confusion with Iris, but the goddess of victory is the more plausible attendant on H. It is probably Nike that offers a cup to H. on the Dodekathlos sarcophagus 1752.

PALAIMON (?)

4th cent. scenes, mainly on Attic vases, of H. with an old man carrying a cornucopia, and sometimes himself carrying the old man, have generally been interpreted as H. with Hades/Plouton. The discovery of the shrine of H./Pankrates/Palaimon in Athens by the Ilissos (see 1381-1384*) makes likely the identification of the figure with the cornucopia as Palaimon (see Commentary; → Melikertes Palaimon). Lykophron 662-665 seems to take H. as Palaimon and Plaut. Rud. 160-161 calls him his socius. An inscription from Koroneia (IG VII 2874; RE Suppl. IX [1962] 514-516; Schachter, A., Cults of Boeotia II [1986] 9-10) names both, not necessarily an assimilation.

Paribeni also compares a fragmentary marble group in Kos (BollArte 45, 1960, 3 fig. 4) with part of a naked male carrying a dressed figure.

COMMENTARY

The important scenes are on Attic rf. vases of the early 4th cent., the early years of the H./Pankrates/Palaimon sanctuary in Athens, but notice the early 3488. We may imagine that H.'s carriage of Palaimon (3496. 3497), apparently over water (3496), was the occasion for the presentation of the cornucopia to H. This we see only on the Boeotian relief 3495 (H. and Palaimon, or H. Palaimon were worshipped at Koronea) and H. holds the cornucopia on 3490 and the Apulian rf. 3493. Elsewhere (3488. 3489. 3491. 3492. 3494) Palaimon retains the horn. The story, presumably an aition for the joint cult in Athens, is not attested in literature. The South Italian vases (3493. 3494) derive from the Attic. Previous explanations take these as scenes of H. with Hades/Plouton but have no support in literature or cult. Van Straten suggested the identity of Palaimon after the discovery of the shrine in Athens. The cornucopia is, however, also an attribute of Hades/Plouton. The figure carried by H. is white-haired on 3496, black-haired on 3497, but presumably the same person, so we cannot identify a Palaimon as older than a Plouton. The figure on 3490 and 3492 is also white-haired and on 3490 the Demeter might hint at Plouton, but there was Demeter also at Agrai near the Palaimon sanctuary. Only the Campanian rf. 3494 otherwise looks much like a Plouton; so there is an element of uncertainty in some identifications still. Note the white-haired figure with cornucopia on the vase, Schauenburg 2 pl. 38, 2 (Private), but is this Plouton or Ploutos? The satyrs on 3492 and 3496 presumably indicate the rustic setting of the episode.

PAN

3498. Oinochoe, Apulian rf. Taranto, Ragusa Coll. - RVAp I 112, 76: Bucrane Group; McPhee, I., AntK 22, 1979, 38-42 pl. 15, 1-3. - About 360 B.C. - H. lies asleep on his lionskin. To l. a small Pan carries off his bow and quiver; to r. another carries a pot, or cornucopia (?). Below, an amphora, club, calyx crater and wineskin (?).

3499. Coptic textile. Vienna, Mus. für angewandte Kunst T 633. - Egger, G., Kopt. Textilien (1967) pl. 33. - Young man (H.?) with stick and club beside Pan.

COMMENTARY

Pan doubles for a satyr, or satyrs, on 3498 (see 3230-3238) and the Campana reliefs (1434*. 1435) where he carries H.'s club beside H.'s lion-chariot. On 3500 he seems to intervene in an Eros/Pan dispute. See also → Artemis 1318a*, Pan watching Artemis crown H. on an Apulian rf. vase. ## PINARII/POTITII

→ Euandros (q. v. for bibl. and discussion) introduced the cult of H. to Rome. The Pinarri and Potitii, among the oldest Roman gentes, oversaw the cult at the ara maxima. They had received H. in Rome and he instructed them about the cult. The Pinarri came late to the sacrificial banquet instituted by Euandros, after the entrails were eaten, and were accordingly excluded from that part of the ritual in perpetuity. JOHN BOARDMAN

XI. Herakles and Theseus

In some accounts → Theseus joins H. in his expedition against the Amazons. In his visit to Hades to fetch Kerberos H. visits Theseus and Peirithoos who have been fastened there for their attempt to rape Persephone, and he frees one or both of them. From the Archaic period on parts of Theseus' life and behaviour are modelled on H. and there are numerous correspondences.

LITERARY SOURCES: Amazonomachy: Theseus' participation in H.'s expedition against the Amazons is recorded by Philoch. (FGrH 328 F 110); Hegias of Troezen (Paus. 1, 2, 1: cf. Davies EGF p. 70-71 F 2; FGrH 606 F 1); Pherekyd. (FGrH 3 F 151); Apollod.

epitome 1, 16; Schol. Eur. Hipp. 10. Theseus thus wins Antiope rather than in an independent sally with Peirithoos, and in Lykophron 1329 (with Schol.) he takes the Amazon's belt to give to H. In Eur. Heraclidae 215-217 Iolaos recalls carrying Theseus' shield. H. supports Theseus by killing Antiope and the Amazons in a version attributed to the Amazonon Epanastasis in Plut. Thes. 28. A 2nd cent. B.C. papyrus with a paraphrase of an epic records a meeting of H. with Theseus and Peirithoos near the Isthmus on H.'s return from the Amazons (Barns, J. W. B., ClQ 43, 1949, 1-3).

In Hades: See → Theseus for details of the attempted rape of Persephone, and for Theseus with Peirithoos in Hades, and Brommer 1, 97-99 for discussion of sources. H.'s intervention was mentioned first in Kritias' Peirithoos (TrGF I 43 F 1) where Peirithoos is fastened to a rock by serpents and the freeing is achieved with the goodwill of the underworld gods. The heroes are usually described as enthroned, but H.'s tug to release Theseus left part of the latter's bottom on the rock to which it was stuck (cf. Panyassis, Davies EGF F 9; Schol. Aristoph. Eq. 1368). Most sources agree that only Theseus was rescued but Diod. 4, 63, 4 records that some authors say neither was freed. A few have both freed (Diod. 4, 26; Hyg. fab. 79). In Sen. Herc. f. 806 Theseus is presented to H. by Plouton and Persephone and (818-821) helps H. drag Kerberos up from Hades.

Other: In Eur. Herc. 1326-1333 Theseus promises gifts to H., sanctuaries, sacrifices and stone monuments (cf. Philoch., FGrH 328 F 18); in Sen. Herc. f. 1341-1344 Theseus offers H. refuge and expiation in Attica after the murder of Megara and his children - nostra te tellus manet. H.'s and Theseus' mothers (Alkmene and Aithra) were grand-daughters of Pelops; their fathers (Zeus and Poseidon) were brothers (Eur. Herc. 1154 συγγενὴς φίλος τ' ἐμὸς - H. speaks; and 1401, will take Theseus as his son, having killed his own children).

A. Amazonomachy

The joint expedition has been suspected on the following monuments.

3510. (= Amazones 95. 245* with bibl.) Athenian Treasury at Delphi, metopes. - 490-485 B.C. - H. and Theseus each kill Amazons on side metopes and the front metopes carry amazonomachy, perhaps linking them.

3511. Pediment from the Temple of Apollo Sosianus, Rome, brought to Rome from Greece in an-tiquty. Rome, Pal. Cons. – La Rocca, E., Amazonomachia (1985); idem, in Archaische und klassische griechische Plastik II (1986) 51–58. – About 440 B.C. – Fragmentary group including Amazons on horseback and Athena. Of H. there is a torso with part of the lionskin. Theseus is identified in the figure formerly taken for Apollo and associated with the group of Niobids. La Rocca suggests that the group may once have occupied the east pediment of the Temple of Apollo Daphnephoros at Eretria.

3512. (= Amazones 98) Reliefs on the throne bars of the Zeus by Phidias in the Temple of Zeus at Olympia, described by Paus. 5, 11, 4. – About 430 B.C. – Paus. saw Theseus with H. fighting Amazons. We do not know how he identified him.

3513. (= Amazones 101) Marble metopes from the Temple of Apollo at Bassai. London, BM. – About 400 B.C. – H. is certainly identified on slab 541 (= 2458*) and Theseus possibly on slab 539 (Hofkes-Brukker, C., Der Bassai-Fries [1975] 90).

3514. (= Amazones 102) Marble frieze from the Mausoleum, Halicarnassus. London, BM. – 350–325 B.C. – H. with club on slab 1008 (= 2459*). Theseus possibly in the adjacent group on slab 1010 (Ashmole, B., JHS 89, 1969, 22–23 pl. 1).

On possible representations on the Temple of Artemis at Magnesia (= Amazones 104*) and the Temple of Hadrian at Ephesus (= Amazones 120*) see Brommer 1, 118.

B. In Hades

See →Theseus for other scenes with Theseus and Peirithoos in Hades, without H. Theseus has been thought present in the Kerberos scenes 2572. 2639. 2668. For a wrong identification see RVP 330, 565 pl. 217b.

3517. Pelike. From Kerch. – Boltunova, A. I., Mél. K. Michalowski (1966) 287–292 figs. 1, 2; Shtitelman, F. M., Works of Art in the Museums of the Ukraine (1977) no. 50. – About 350–330 B.C. – Young H., in lionskin, with club in crook of l. arm, drags a bearded man by hand and shoulder from a block. At l. a woman stands (Persephone?), Nike flies to crown H., at r. Athena seated.

3519.* Bronze shield band relief. Olympia Mus. From Olympia. – Kunze, Schildbänder 112–113 Beil. 7, 4; Schefold, Sagenbilder fig. 24; Felten fig. 15; Brommer 1, 101 fig. 15. – 575–550 B.C. – Theseus and Peirithoos (named) seated on thrones side by side, their hands raised forwards. H. (named) in tunic approaches from the r. drawing his sword.

UNCERTAIN

See Simon and Simon/Hirmer for the various interpretations proposed which include H. with Theseus and Peirithoos in Hades. This is likely, but it is by no means clear that the main theme is the freeing of the heroes, rather than, e.g., heroes before Marathon (thus, Harrison, E. B., ArtBull 59, 1977, 390–402).

C. Other

There are a few monuments on which H. and Theseus have been identified in non-narrative settings. E.g., the Barracco relief (1380*) where the youth with the bull may be taken for Theseus (Hausmann, Reliefbecher 71); a bf. cup where there is a bust of H. and of another (3); a painting at Pompeii with H. and two youths (1572). There were statues of H. and Theseus (with Apollo) in the Athens Agora near the Temple of Ares (Paus. 1, 8, 4), and (with Hermes) in the gymnasium at Messene (Paus. 4, 32, 1), but it is not known whether a positive association was intended.

COMMENTARY

The parallel between the two monster-slaying heroes was observed already in the early 6th cent. For many monuments and vases of the Archaic period artists were clearly deliberately choosing a juxtaposition (cf. Boardman 2–3), and confusion is possible, notably in scenes with the Cretan/Marathonian bull (see Section IV, H Commentary). With the special prominence given to Theseus in Athens from the end of the 6th cent. the parallelism becomes more marked, and the heroes share the honours on the Athenian Treasury at Delphi (3510) and on the Hephaisteion in Athens ([Dodekathlos] 1706). At the same time a special relationship is sought, especially in the story which allows Theseus a part in H.'s Amazonomachy. It is difficult, however, to identify certain representations of this joint expedition in art though it is probable on the Athenian Treasury (3510) and Paus. may have been right to see it at Olympia (3512). H. seems certain on the pediment in Rome (3511). Generally, the Archaic H.'s Amazonomachies give place to Thesean Attic Amazonomachies with no conflation, and from the Classical period on H.'s labour is represented rather as a duel (see Section IV, K). Literary sources are more explicit about the relationship.

The freeing of Peirithoos and/or Theseus from Hades appears earlier in art than literature, on the Peloponnesian shield band (3519), and then on a few Classical Athenian vases and a relief (3515–3518). It is not clear on 3516 or 3519 whether both heroes are to be freed, though this is likely since both are shown, undifferentiated. On 3515 and 3517 only one is shown being freed. Common sense suggests that this must be Theseus, but the beard has made Peirithoos the more popular identification. In both scenes H.'s effort in removing the hero from the seat to which he has been fastened is vigorously expressed. In the relief 3518 the implication that the seated figure is to be left behind depends on the comparable mood of the associated «Three-Figure» reliefs, rather than on the contrasted pose (standing/seated) which might have seemed aesthetically preferable.

For the derivation of various details of Theseus' iconography and attributes from H. see →Theseus.

XII. Herakles attends other mythological occasions

H.'s presence in many scenes is justified only by his attendance on Athena, with no closer relevance. This is especially true of scenes attended by Olympians in the Archaic period. Otherwise, particular exploits are appropriate to certain localities or deities; thus, H. may appear in various underworld scenes (e.g., →Danaides 22*) or even at Hades' rape of Persephone (→Hades 19, with Kerberos; cf. Section IV, M, 15). In the few scenes listed below some other reason for his presence may often be suspected.

ARIADNE

H. attends Dionysos' discovery of Ariadne on the sarcophagus, Alexandria 17927 (Koch/Sichtermann, RömSark fig. 596; SarkRel IV 3 pl. 250 no. 228), simply borrowed from the many thiasos scenes which he also attends.

ATHENA (birth of)

H. (illogically) attends the birth of Athena on two Attic bf. vases (→Athena 335. 349* [= Apollon 819*]).

MEDEIA

That H. and Medeia are both infanticides may explain his presence in the scene of Medeia at Eleusis on an Apulian rf. crater (1409 = Herakleidae 9). He attends her crimes on another Apulian crater (Munich 3296, →Athena 631) but here beside Athena, and passively.

OINOMAOOS

H. attends the oath-taking between →Oinomaos and →Pelops before the race on an Apulian crater (London F 278; RVAp II 931, 118 pl. 365, 3), possibly for the association of the event with the founding of the Olympic Games, also attributed to H.

GENERAL COMMENTARY

This Commentary presents a summary of the material in the above article (LIMC IV, V) and takes into consideration so far as is possible material in other LIMC articles which deal with Greek and Roman H., including subjects for later volumes (principally →Kentauroi, Kerkopes, Kyknos, Nereus, Nessos, Omphale, Prometheus, Syleus, Telephos, Triton). It concentrates on the hero's physical appearance, dress, weapons and attributes; and adds a historical survey, by main periods, indicating the emergence of new scenes, their regional popularity and possible significance. Given the volume of material, token examples only are generally cited. For the historical survey of the development of the H. type in sculpture see O. Palagia's Commentary to section I C (LIMC IV 791-796).

Physical appearance

H. is shown as an infant fighting the snakes in his cradle (section III A) and carried by Hermes to Cheiron (1665*); as a boy in sculpture (section I C 8; Late Hellenistic, mainly Roman); as a youth at school (section III C). In earlier Archaic art he is invariably bearded but there are isolated beardless exceptions: Protocorinthian, about 660 B.C. (Schefold, Sagenbilder pl. 24b), and in Attic bf. about 540 B.C. (Birmingham; Brijder, Siana I pl. 58c); after about 540 he begins to be shown beardless more often, and frequently so by the end of the century. This feature is not always confined to its most appropriate occasion – his first Labour, with the Nemean Lion – although this is the commonest context for it in the Classical period. Youthfulness may also connote rejuvenation through apotheosis – in the bf. chariot scenes (2881, 2893; about 540 and 520 B.C.), in Attic rf. rising from his pyre (section VIII E-H, with rare exceptions), or anticipating apotheosis in the garden of the Hesperides (section IV N). In Late Archaic and Classical scenes with Athena alone his occasional youthfulness more probably refers to his mortal state, early in his career; but some of these scenes may suggest his age when he is shown leaning on his club, in the pose often adopted by the elderly (e.g., on grave reliefs) or where he is wearing a himation alone, or himation over his lionskin. Thus, on bf. chariot scenes (2896, 2897, 2900, 2906); or with Athena (3167, 3168, 3170). Otherwise the himation alone is a suitable relaxed attire for Archaic and later feasts (section II H), on Olympus (3386, 3388, 3392), or watching Philoktetes receive his bow after 'death' (2915). On some Roman cycles of the Labours on sarcophagi he is made to age progressively (e.g., 1716-1718, 1722), but there is a general uniformity of physique in all Roman representations of H., usually naked, with lionskin and club.

H. will often wear a chitoniskos alone in the Archaic period, especially against the Lion before he can wear its skin (but he is more commonly naked). A loincloth typifies some Attic bf. encounters with Antaios (→ Antaios I 1*, 3*, 10*, 14*). For the himation, with or without lionskin, see above. He is commonly wreathed, on festive occasions, sacrificing, or as victor (see Blech, M., Studien zum Kranz bei den Griechen [1982] 431-432 and index). He wears an Oscan metal belt in an Apulian rf. apotheosis (2928) and what is regarded as an athlete's belt on a Roman bronze (861*). He is dressed as a priest (H. Gaditanus) on a Roman relief (872a); and as an actor in the company of Muses on Arretine cups (1481). He dresses as a woman for → Omphale.

H.'s hair is regularly shown short and often curly, as is his beard. On one Attic bf. chariot-apotheosis it is white (→ Apollon 833c*; by the Madrid P., who also dwells on H.'s hairy chest on 1491*). On some Classical statuary he is given cauliflower ears (Lenbach and Lansdowne types, 325-376, 656-659*; and cf. 189*). His glaring eyes which were noted by some writers (LIMC IV 730) are accentuated in some Attic rf. scenes of the first half of the 5th cent. (e.g., 1666*, 1671*, 1870, 2189, 2197). Lysippos' statues gave him a distinctive physiognomy with heavy features and unruly curly hair and beard; these almost amount to a portrait type which remains influential throughout antiquity (cf. LIMC IV 793) and enables identification of heads and figures without attribute or context. It is Lysippos too (notably in the H. Farnese; 681a-737) who imbues him with a grossly muscled physique, often copied thereafter, and who expresses his extreme weariness at the end of his Labours in the same figure (and cf. 663-681) and in the seated colossus for Tarentum (927-949*). (See above for earlier, weary, leaning figures of H. in himation.) His head is exceptionally winged (as Hermes, with whom he may be assimilated) on 591* (Polykleitan?).

Arms and armour

Both literature and art agree in making H. primarily a bowman – the use of his bow was crucial to the successful outcome of the Trojan War, with or without the arrows tipped with Hydra poison (which may be alluded to in art, on Corinthian vases; Boardman, J., OJA 1, 1982, 237-238; Amyx, CVP 629, 30, objects that the arrows were already poisoned but there is no evidence for this and he hardly ever shoots the Hydra). These arrows were, via Nessos's blood, his ultimate undoing. In Late Archaic Attic art he may adopt the Scythian costume which is attributed to other heroic bowmen at the time, with patterned, sleeved and trousered dress and the gorytos bowcase (e.g., 3348, → Gigantes 303*). He fights from Zeus' chariot pole on some bf. gigantomachies (→ Gigantes 106*, 114*, 120*, 123*). He is commonly shown wearing a sword but not often using it except against humanoid foes – Amazons, Kentauroi, Kyknos – and often in Attic bf. against the Lion, sometimes shown to be ineffective (1882; cf. 1806, 1834). He sometimes uses a spear when fighting like a hoplite (see below) but is rarely seen at ease holding one, as in the bf. chariot scene on 1414. He throws a stone at Kyknos on the bf. vase Munich 1709 (ABV 361, 14); he holds his father's thunderbolt on a Roman gem (538*). Against the Hydra he may use a harpe (section IV C). At Oichalia he may use his fists (rf., → Iphitos I 2).

From the 6th cent. on his club is his most popular weapon in art, and from the Classical period this becomes overwhelmingly true, serving both as weapon and commonest attribute. It is essentially a rustic weapon, suiting a fighter who wears an animal skin, but it is by no means clear whether its adoption depends on this aspect of H.'s behaviour (on which see also below, on the lionskin) or relates to figures of the eastern smiting god wielding a mace (generally on maces and clubs see Buchholz, H.-G., ArchHom, Kriegswesen 2, E 319-344). It appears first with H. on Corinthian vases from about 600 B.C. (2011, not in use while he fights the Hydra; and 2821, fighting a snake, about 580 B.C.). At about the same time it is seen on a 'Melian' vase (1690*) and soon afterwards on Attic bf. (3087). It was meant to have been fashioned from a whole tree trunk, not just a branch, and its massive quality is generally emphasised by artists, sometimes in a deliberate contrast with Theseus' lighter weapon (Philadelphia L 64.185; ARV<sup>2</sup> 187, 62; Kleophrades P.). However, some of the earlier representations show it slim and tubular, probably intended to represent metal (also attested as a material in some texts); this is true of the 'Melian' 1690* and a shield-band relief (2682 = Atlas 3*). On the latter it is given a snake-head handle, which is seen also on an Attic rf. vase about 500 B.C. (2036). H. is shown making his own club on a Roman gem and a 4th cent. A.D. ivory (1595*, 1596*), and receiving it from Hephaistos, via Athena, on a Hellenistic relief cup (3155 = Athena 57*).

The lionskin, acquired from the Nemean lion, and thereby impenetrable by weapons, is H.'s only 'magic' equipment (in a deviant version, Apollod. bibl. 2 (65-66) 4, 9-10, it is from the lion of Kithairon, which makes little sense). Incongruously, he wears the skin already while fighting the lion on the scarab 1790, and the Attic (?) bf. vase Compiègne 982 (Para 108, 6; CVA 1 pl. 3, 2). It is his most characteristic attribute, yet it may be worn by other heroes in literature (e.g., Diomedes [Hom. Il. 10, 177-178], Aeneas [Verg. Aen. 2, 721-722, cf. 7, 666-669; 9, 306-307]) and occasionally in art, although then the skin is generally slighter (thought of as a panther's it may be) and is not worn as H. wears his lionskin. Artemis, however, may wear a lionskin in the Heraklean manner in Attic bf. (→ Artemis 1327* = Gigantes 105; Bérard, C., AION 9, 1987, 159-165, figs. 23, 26, 2-3; 27, 1). The manner of wearing the skin in the Archaic and Classical periods generally reflects its properties: the head as a helmet (though the head may sometimes be omitted in bf., e.g. 2455, 2822, Amazons 7*), the skin wrapped around the body tight like a corselet, or hanging from the left arm like a shield (e.g. 23*, 1087*, 1096*, 1097, 2468). Often after about 500 B.C., however, it simply flies behind his naked body like a chlamys (see below). It is knotted at his neck with the simple 'Herakles knot'.

Its origins are not revealed by its iconography. Egyptian priests and others (e.g. the bronze, Samos VIII pls. 1-2) wear felines' skins, and it is a regular feature of figures of → Bes on whom the head hangs on the chest and the tail between the legs. It seems very likely that adoption of the lionskin by H. and the story of the Lion's and therefore its pelt's invulnerability go together, from whatever source, which is perhaps more likely to be literary than visual, though the wearing of the skin may be inspired by foreign models. It suits a rustic club-bearing hero (see above), and it may be significant that it is very commonly omitted in 6th cent. Peloponnesian art where the image of the naked or hoplite H. is preferred (cf. Boardman, J., in Festschr.

Clatting [1990]) and on the Olympia metopes (1705). Yet it is on Corinthian vases that it first appears: on the possible H. bowman on a fragment of around 650 (JHS 71, 1951, pl. 29a; Corinth VII 2, no. 1 pl. 1) and more clearly for the centaur-fighter on the slightly later alabastron, Florence 79252 (AJA 60, 1956, pl. 69, 9-10). In these scenes the skin wraps the body and only on the latter are the legs clear, hanging down, and the head probable, at H.'s shoulder. At the end of the 7th cent. the skin is worn with the head in position as helmet on an East Greek bronze relief (2476). On a 'Melian' vase of the early 6th cent. the lion head hangs down H.'s back, near waist-level (1690*), as it does on a Chian fragment of 575-550 (57*); on none of the examples cited is the skin belted.

From the 560s on the skin is regularly worn in Attic art (an early example, 3087, with the head worn as a helmet). In bf. it is usually wrapped closely round the body and belted. The scheme persists into the Late Archaic when it may also appear clipped together at the front rather than belted (e.g., → Alkyoneus 11*; → Bousiris 12*) and an added refinement is to have the tail looped through the belt (e.g., 40*, 1332*, 1477*, 1562*, 2015, 2037, 2245, 2869, 2959, 3165; → Amazons 28*, 83*, 86*; → Geras 5*). From the end of the 6th cent. the skin may hang from the l. arm, like a shield (e.g. 23*, 1087*, 1096*, 1097*, 2468; → Alkyoneus 10*, 13*, 18*. → Amazons 64*, 89*), a scheme adopted at the same time by Athena for her aegis, as on the Acropolis pediment (→ Athena 125*; cf. the rf. → Athena 387*, 389*). Now too the skin may fly free from H.'s shoulders, like a chlamys (e.g. 2178, 2958, 2988, 3016; → Amazons 62*) and the lion-head is less often worn in position as a helmet.

On two Archaic bronzes the skin is worn under a corselet (48*, 73*); exceptionally the skin is worn upside down with the head hanging below the belt, like a pardalis (e.g. 2969). On these the exceptional protective role of the skin seems to be forgotten. This pardalis scheme is also met, if rarely, in Attic bf. (2607, 2463 = Eurytion II 2*). The lion's eyes are normally closed, but see 11*-14*. The head can sometimes appear quite animated, as on the Selinus metope, → Amazons 96*.

After about 500 B.C. there are occasional examples of a lion-head helmet worn by H. (or sometimes perhaps by his sons), clearly inspired by the lionskin: on the Athenian Treasury at Delphi (→ Kyknos; Boardman, GSAP fig. 213, 4); in the Aegina pediment (2792; doubtfully Hyllos); on a Campanian vase (1532 = 3468); in the Tegea pediment (1309; doubtfully Telephos); and cf. the Roman 1308a. Note also the boarskin cap on Republican coins (165*; also, Crawford, RRC 42/2 pl. 8; 69/5, 72/7 pl. 14).

H. virtually never wears a normal helmet despite [Hes.] sc. 136-138. The identification of the figure on the bf. vase Paris E 707, fighting a snake, is uncertain (see Commentary to section VII B). H. wears helmet and greaves on the Paestan vase by Assteas showing his madness (1684*); a helmet and shield on an Apulian vase, with Kyknos, Ruvo J. 1088 (RVAp I 29, 23) where his usual equipment is conspicuously discarded at his feet; and a helmet on Hellenistic coins of Lamia (993*).

Helmet, shield and corselet are rendered unnecessary through the properties of the lionskin, quite apart from any positive intention to show him as a non-hoplite. It is notable that many of the few Archaic representations of him in a bell corselet are Peloponnesian: bronzes (48*. 73*; with lionskin beneath), Laconian cups (1764. 2114) and the Laconian lead figurines (Pipili, LacIc 13 fig. 18), the Corinthian plaque (2821). For some examples on Attic bf. see 1317*. 2177. 2330. 2975. 3037, and after 3112; → Alkestis 58*; Palermo, Jdl 80 (1965) 99 fig. 22; Malibu 88.AE.24, Medea Group. And on rf. of about 450, a leather corselet on → Geras 2*. A muscle corselet is the only part of H. left behind on his pyre in Attic rf. (2916–2918) yet he is not seen wearing one on Attic vases. However, one is worn by the actor impersonating H. on the Attic rf. Pronomos vase of around 400 B.C. (Naples 3240; → Dionysos 835*), which possibly gives a clue to the subject of the play in preparation. Otherwise it is worn by H. on Classical Corinthian cups of the Wide Group (1327*. 1352; Reading 47.viii.1, CVA 1 pl. 16, 5; Athens NM 409, AM 26, 1901, 146) and on Campanian rf. (1532 = 3468). There was a statue of an armed H. at Sparta (82, where the reference should be to Paus. 3, 15, 3; the statue in Paus. 3, 14, 6 was not armed). On H.'s armour in literature see Holt, P., AntCl 55, 1986, 304–307.

Other attributes and possessions

H., a notorious drinker, is well provided with cups. Since he was a Boeotian by birth the preferred shape is the kantharos, and this may be used also for libation, as an alternative to the more usual phiale. In the Hellenistic and Roman period his cup is commonly the skyphos with vertical ring handles. He rarely drinks from a horn (in the Bibax type in sculpture 754. 755. 764*; in Attic bf. 1517? 3239; Apulian rf. 1494). In the 5th cent. B.C. he often favours the so-called Sotadean kantharos (footless, with rounded bowl) for which the ancient name seems to have been karchesion. In 5th cent. literature it is a karchesion that Zeus uses to dupe Alkmene into believing that she is lying with her husband, and it is likely that the choice of shape for H. was determined by this association with his divine father. A bronze example was found at his sanctuary on Mt. Oita, and a gilt silver one was dedicated to H. in Elaius and recorded in the Parthenon accounts of 434/3 B.C. and later (IG I<sup>3</sup> 343, 5–6). (For the karchesion see Boardman, J., JHS 99, 1979, 149–151; for H. and the Dionysiac associations of his kantharos see Carpenter, T. H., Dionysian Imagery in Archaic Greek Art [1986] 117–118.)

An unexpected but recurrent attribute of H. in all periods is a cornucopia. In the earliest representation it replaces a drinking horn at a feast with Hermes on an Attic bf. cup of about 500 (1498). Young H. reclines with one on a 5th cent. relief at Rhamnous (1062). On a 4th cent. Attic vase he receives one from a figure probably identifiable as Palaimon (3490; and cf. the 4th cent. relief from Thebes, 1495) in a cult associated with H. (as) Pankrates, where he also is seen holding one (1381–1384*; cf. Apulian rf. 3493). He holds one on other Classical Attic reliefs and vases (1386*. cf. 1389. 3222); S. Italian vases and terracottas (1000. 1000a. 1535a. 1571; Naples H 2408, RVAp 1 25, 108; Naples private, Trendall, RVP 165, 329 pl. 110a, Python); coins of Cyprus (1001*), Kyzikos (1073*). In the Hellenistic period he reclines with one (1063); stands holding one in a statuary type of Hellenistic origin (555–579*, including coins and the copies of coins on Roman clay 'Herakles cups' [Pagenstecher, Calen 151–157]; on 562 [Lehmann, P., Statues on coins of S. Italy (1946) 3 fig. 2] the horn seems filled with phalloi; cf. also the statuette of Lenbach type, 359). In the Roman period he holds a cornucopia on some herms (1163–1166*), in a Pompeian painting (1694*), on a relief where he also holds a baby (1695*), on a relief with Hebe (Guerrini, L., Palazzo Mattei [1982] no. 28 pl. 23a). He is shown receiving one from Ceres on a medallion of Antoninus Pius (3204. cf. 3205), from Africa on coins of Commodus (3412), and from Fortuna on the Kastell Echzell painting (3508). (For studies of H. and the cornucopia see ML 1 2, 2176. 2183. 2186–2188. 2964; Hartwig, R. P., H. mit dem Füllhorn [1883]; Becatti, G., BollArte 53, 1968, 1–11.)

Literary accounts of his possession of the cornucopia (LIMC IV 729) seem to seek to explain a widespread phenomenon which was not especially related to any particular story or cult, but rather reflected a fertility aspect of the hero not much admitted in ritual but indicative of his universal appeal and therefore universal functions. Related is his association with and partial assimilation to Silvanus (see section X s. v. 'Silvanus').

H. holds an akerostolion on a medallion of Antoninus Pius (918); receives a globe from Sol on a 3rd cent. A.D. coin of Serdica (3454) and holds a globe with Victoria upon it on a coin of Constantine, Rome (539*); holds a kerykeion on a 3rd cent. Pisidian coin (540). Athena's owl sits upon his shoulder on the late Archaic gem 66*, and accompanies his chariot to Olympus on the Apulian vases 2927. 2928.

Actors as Herakles

These have not been recorded in the main article except where a mythological scene seems depicted, as on the S. Italian phlyax vases: 1522* (reclining at feast). 1538 (with a woman). 1550 (pursues woman). 3076 (with Apollo). 3372 (with Zeus); also Taranto 56048, with a king (Trendall/Webster, Illustrations IV 23; Trendall, Phlyax Vases no. 122); Catania MB 4232, with Kerkopes (ibid. no. 25); Rome, Ragusa Coll. 9, with bull's head (ibid. no. 128); Milan, Scala 12, with woman and Hermes (ibid. no. 95); Taranto 7591, bust (ibid. no. 190); Berlin 3046, knocking at door (ibid. no. 22); Lentini (ibid. no. 79; = Auge 6); private, 'H. threatens to decapitate Eurystheus with a pair of shears' (Webster, MIOMC 3 110 under UT2).

The H. actor on the Pronomos vase has been discussed above (under Arms and Armour); he holds a mask not unlike the features of the actor himself. It may well be that a play is the inspiration for mythological scenes on various vases, notably the South Italian, and that H.'s presence, as protagonist or onlooker, indicates his role in the play but he is not shown as an actor. The same is true of the scenes with satyrs which might be suggested by Attic satyr plays, although more than the presence of a satyr is required for the identification of satyr play on Attic vases. For a selection of H. masks see 257–270*; with 270* cf. Sotheby's 11 July 1988, lot 381, 3, and for tragic masks and figures of H. Furens, Webster, MTSP 158.

For comic masks and figures of H. see Webster, MIOMC 3 18 Type J, with references for terracottas and other monuments, and pl. 1d; ibid. 110 UT2 is a comic H. with the boar (once Nordmann Coll.; Winter, Typen 417, 4; V 74 fig. 93). A comic H. is identified or suspected on some Kabirion vases: Kabirenheiligtum IV 62 no. 286 pl. 24, 3 (= 2277), 64 no. 356 (Acheloos), 67 no. 403 pl. 23, 5 (Omphale?), 67 no. 410 pl. 23, 3 (Atlas?); and cf. the Kabirion statuettes of a figure with lionskin (?) and kithara. Kabirenheiligtum V 122–123 nos. 312–313 pl. 24 (= 1470*). The H. on a centaur chariot on an Attic rf. vase (1429 = Aithiopes 22*) is preceded by a figure that resembles a comic actor and himself seems as comic as his Nike charioteer. See also Pagenstecher, Calen pl. 23, 221a, for a roundel relief with a comic H. with club and cup. And a possible comic H. on the scarab, Lamia Mus. D 3016 (863, Pantos, P. A., in Festschr. N. Himmelmann [1989] 316–318 pl. 50, 2. 4. 6), plump, with cloak, club and lionskin.

In general on H. and the stage see Vollkommer, ch. 9.

Historical survey

This section presents a summary of the development of the iconography of H. by periods, with selective reference to LIMC catalogues and no more than allusion to other aspects of the hero – literary, religious, philosophical, etc. Brief bibliographies with each section indicate principal sources other than the LIMC articles. They omit Brommer's works (Vasenlisten 3, Denkmälerlisten I, H., Herakles II, and numerous articles) because these are clearly fundamental to any study of the hero and have rendered the work for this, as for many other LIMC articles, infinitely less laborious.

Geometric and early Archaic periods (to c. 625 B.C.)

BIBLIOGRAPHY: Carter, J., 'The Beginnings of Narrative Art in the Greek Geometric Period', BSA 67, 1972, 25–58; Fittschen, Sagendarstellungen; Furtwängler, A., ML 1 2 (1886–1890) 2135–2147 s. v. 'Herakles'; Hampe, Sagenbilder; Scheffold, Sagenbilder.

The identification of H. in early art depends either on the presence of distinctive attributes, which do not appear until well into the second half of the 7th cent. (see above) or on unequivocal myth scenes. To start with the certain: some scenes of H. and the Hydra appear on the Boeotian bronze subgeometric fibulae of around and probably after 700 B.C. (2019. 2020) and these may give some confidence in identifying other scenes on these objects, but the confidence is not total: the Lion (1913), the Deer (2205), the Birds (2280). For the supposed Aktorione/Molione (→ Aktorione 6–9) on the fibulae serious doubt must be entertained whether these figures appear at all in Greek Geometric art (cf. Boardman, J., in Moon [ed.], AGAI 25–27).

The second (and third) quarter of the 7th cent. sees more certain identifications. On Protocorinthian vases we find the Bull (2353. 2354), Geryon (2462), perhaps the Hesperides (2690) and Centaur fights (→ Kentauroi; Fittschen 111–128; and Arts in Virginia 21, 2, 1981, 20 fig. 6). The last subject can be traced earlier, into Late Geometric, on an Attic vase and in a bronze group, but there can be no certainty so early that a horse-man is uniquely a centaur attacked by H. The presence of a woman, a probable Deianeira, makes the identification more plausible (→ Nessos), and she appears on a Subgeometric seal and Protoattic vases before the mid century and a Spartan ivory and Argive relief vases after it (Fittschen l.c.).

Various other early identifications have been proposed, all to varying degrees debatable. On Attic Late Geometric vases the Lion (1907), the Birds (2275), and see → Aktorione section D. There are other lion-fights – on Chian Late Geometric (1908), Protocorinthian (1909), a Naxian relief pithos (1912) and Spartan ivory (1914); the Hydra on a Cretan relief plaque (Fittschen SB 31), a bronze seal (2026); the Deer on Italo-Geometric (2206) and a probably Cypriot glass gem (2207); the tripod fight with Apollo on relief vases from Sicily and Boeotia (3057. 3060), on an early seal (3059) and a bronze tripod leg from Olympia (3061); a Protocorinthian snake-fight (2820).

These few scenes bear little relationship to the few subjects alluded to in early literature (see LIMC IV 730–731), but it is notable that they are mainly of what come to be regarded as canonical Labours – the Lion, Hydra, Bull, Geryon, perhaps also the Deer, Birds, Hesperides; seconded by subjects which long remain popular thereafter – the tripod-fight and centaur-fight. The prime centres – Boeotia, Corinth, Sparta and Athens – are the main sources of any myth scenes of the period, so regional preferences cannot be argued; nor are any clear iconographic conventions established, even for the same scenes in one centre.

Archaic period (c. 625–475 B.C.)

BIBLIOGRAPHY: Furtwängler, A., ML 1 2 (1886–1890) 2147–2153. 2192–2222 s. v. 'Herakles'; Kunze, Schildbänder; Payne, NC 125–133; Pipili, LacIc; Scheffold, SB II; Steuben (for Attic and Corinthian); Amyx, CVP 628–632.

In this period the identity of H. is soon established, with club and lionskin (see above) and the most numerous range of scenes is offered for any commensurable period in antiquity. Athens dominates the subject but by no means monopolises it or dictates the schemes for many scenes.

The description of the Chest of Kypselos (1697) indicates the range of Corinthian awareness of H.

scenes, and this is well reflected on the vases of Corinth (down to c. 550). Five Labours appear: the Lion (1828. 1909? 1910?), the Hydra is especially popular (1990-1995. 2011), Geryon (2498), Kerberos (2553), Amazons (once, → Amazones 1*; Amyx, CVP 557.4). There is also a scattering of other stories: marriage with Hebe (3331), → Acheloos 246, → Amazones 1, → Eurytos 11 (= Deion 1*, = Iole 11; the first symposium in Greek art), → Gigantes 98, → Hesione, → Kentauroi, → Kerkopes, → Kyknos, → Nereus, fighting snakes (2820. 2821). There seems no particular pattern in the choice, but most are earlier than their counterparts in Athens.

Even more prolific are the NE Peloponnesian shieldband reliefs, with a very full series of Labours: the Lion (1776. 1799. 1830. 1839. 1846-1848), the Hydra (2052), the Boar (2118. 2136), Geryon (2477. 2478), Hesperides (2682); also, the tripod-fight with Apollo (2954. 2955. 2984. 3062?), in Hades (3519), → Antaios 1 33, → Halios Geron 2, → Kerkopes, → Nessos; see Kunze, Schildbänder index. Sparta is the next most important centre in the Peloponnese. Cycles of Labours appeared on monuments there (1700. 1701) and on vases (mainly 575-525 B.C.) several Labours (1764. 1911? 2035. 2114. 2317) and other scenes: 2861, → Amazones 2, → Kerkopes, → Kentauroi. The Spartan relief ivories are almost as prolific (1777. 2054; → Nessos, → Prometheus, still without H.). (See Pipili for all Spartan scenes.) Many Archaic bronze statuettes may be Laconian or Corinthian (26*-31*. 48*. 73*. 77-80. 82-84).

Olympia attracted the Labours dedication of Heraclea Pontica (1704); Delphi, the tripod-fight on the Siphnian Treasury (3026), the Athenian Treasury metopes (1703), another metope (2022); and H. will have participated in gigantomachies at both sanctuaries (→ Gigantes 2-6) and appears on other minor votives (as 2025). Aegina may have his attack on Troy in the Aphaea pediment (2792) also celebrating the Aeginetan Telamon. Boeotia has a poor record; cf. tripod fights (2948. 2849) and cf. 2262, → Kentauroi. The Eretrian vase with the Hydra (2007) copies Attic. Other local preferences in the scenes mentioned are not easily identified, except for the tripod-fight at Delphi, although this is common enough elsewhere also.

The islands have a slight but interesting record: clay reliefs in Crete (47*. 2621); a Thasian plate (→ Amazones 60) and relief pithos with tripod-fight (3010); a polychrome plate (Theran?; EADélos X no. 45; → Nessos); and an early marriage, on a 'Melian' vase (1690*). East Greece comes late into the story, but this could be deceptive. A 7th cent. marriage on Samos is reported (3330) and the bronze plaque from Samos with Geryon (2476) gives the scene in a highly developed form before 600 B.C. H. is important in Thasos, through cult (45* and later coins) and the centaur fight finds monumental expression in Anatolia, on the Assos temple (with a Triton-fight), and in clay revetments from Ak Alan and Larisa (→ Kentauroi). H. appears on few vases (57*, Chian. 1842, bf. and MuM Auktion 40, 1969, no. 53, bf.) and in terracottas (12*.

54*; cf. faience 13*. 14*). Late Archaic gems are dominantly East Greek in origin and often show H. in single studies or heads (section I) and in action (Boardman, AGGems index); he appears too on coins of the region, notably Kyzikos (10*. 37. 44*).

In the west H. is a subject for monumental art: on the Silaris temple (1698) and at Selinus (→ Acheloos 220*, → Gigantes 13*. 14*, → Kerkopes); and on clay reliefs (often arulae) (2024. 2119; → Acheloos 224*. 225*; → Alkyoneus 1*. 2; → Kerkopes). On western vases he is well represented in 'Chalcidian' bf. (2464. 2479. 3019; → Amazones 3*; → Kentauroi, → Kyknos) and the pseudo-'Chalcidian' (1809; → Amazones 24), and notably on vases apparently made in immigrant East Greek studios in Etruria, especially the Caeretan hydriae (Hemelrijk, J. M., Caeretan Hydriae [1984] index): 1779. 2016. 2464. 2479. 2616. 2844; → Acheloos 213; → Alkyoneus 31*; → Bousiris 9*; → Hesione (cf. 2844); → Kentauroi; and an introduction to Olympus on a vase related to the Northampton Group (2908). The winged Geryons of both 'Chalcidian' vases (2464. 2479) echoed by the Sicilian poet Stesichoros are notable.

The richness and variety of this record around the Greek world pales beside that of Athens, where H. scenes account for no less than 44 per cent of all myth scenes on Athenian bf. vases, concentrated principally in the years c. 560-510 (cf. Boardman, J., JHS 95, 1975, 1-2), with a perceptible weakening towards the end of the 6th cent. Some scenes are accepted from the repertory of other Greek centres, but most seem to have been devised in Athens and many new scenes or unique variants are introduced. The monumental scenes are particularly numerous: Acropolis pediments - 2021 (Hydra), 2862 (Introduction), → Triton (twice), presumably in the Gigantomachy (→ Gigantes 7), and from the Agora, the Lion (Agora XI pl. 17 no. 96); cf. also reliefs, the base (52 + 1877 + 2579) and 65*. 71. 2110. The architectural emphasis is remarkable, especially on the Acropolis where, it seems, he was not worshipped.

All the canonical Labours (section IV; except for the eccentric Augeias) appear on vases from the 560s on, but Amazons appear a little earlier (→ Amazones section I A), Birds a little later, Diomedes only from the end of the 6th cent., as also Hesperides scenes without Atlas. Many other major episodes appear as early (it must be remembered that the 560s, after the François Vase and with the Tyrrhenian amphorae, see the start of many new myth scenes on Attic vases): Introduction to Olympus (section VIII A. B), → Acheloos sections F-J, → Gigantes section I C 2 (notably the weaving of the scene on the peplos dedicated to Athena), → Kyknos I. Others appear even earlier: → Kentauroi from c. 580 (but → Pholos from c. 530), → Nessos (as already on Protoattic) from c. 600, → Nereus from c. 590 (but H. destroying Nereus' palace only after 500), → Prometheus c. 610-550. Others begin only later: → Alkyoneus from c. 520, → Antaios I from c. 520, → Bousiris 10-18 from c. 530, → Eurytos 12-7 from c. 500, → Geras c. 480-450, → Hesione at the end of the 6th cent., → Kerkopes from c. 550, → Syleus c. 490-460, leading a monster c. 500 (2834-2837), rescuing Hera (3348).

Apart from this plethora of myth scenes there is a great number of scenes of H. with Athena in no action context but emphasising their close relationship (section IX E) by proximity, a handshake or libation. With these go scenes of H. as lone symposiast attended by Athena (section II H) and as musician (section II G). These are all scenes peculiar to Athens. Several others dwell on other aspects of his life: an infant (1665*), as athlete (1316-1320), at a fountain (1322*), at sacrifice (1331-1334*. 1336*. 1337*. 1340*-1342. 1344), in chariot (section II F), with family (section III D c). His association with Hermes is a constant theme (section IX M), and with Dionysos and/or satyrs mainly after about 500 (section IX G).

It has been argued by some scholars, though without commanding universal assent, that H. enjoyed a special position in Archaic Athens through his association with the city goddess, and that this was exploited as a symbol of the state of Athens, involving at times a degree of identification by its rulers with the hero, notably by Peisistratos. This is shown by the frequency and variety of scenes, innovations in myth and story which seem possibly related to contemporary events of a political or religious nature, and H.'s exceptional position in the architectural sculpture of the Acropolis. For discussions in this vein see Boardman, J., RA 1972, 57-72 (Introduction to Olympus); JHS 95, 1975, 1-12 (Kerberos, Eleusis, the Deer, Nereus/Triton, scenes with Athena), RA 1978, 227-234 (tripod-fight), in AGRP (Amsterdam) 239-247 (with Athena), in Festschr. N. Himmelmann (1988) (Nereus/Triton); Glynn, R., AJA 85, 1981, 121-132 (Nereus/Triton); Shapiro, H. A., AJA 88, 1984, 523-529 (Kyknos); Williams, D. in ICG (Rouen) 131-140 (Alkyoneus). Dissent has been summarised by Cook, R. M., JHS 107, 1987, 167-169, answered by Boardman, J., JHS 109, 1989, 158-159.

The Archaic period saw the establishment of the iconography of all major H. scenes although there is no hint of a canonic cycle of the Labours as yet, and there are few innovations later. This was by no means altogether due to Athens, and the earlier Peloponnesian contribution was important, while the East Greek may easily be underestimated. The Peloponnesian preference for a H. without lionskin suggests a rather different view of the hero, more the hoplite (as he is in [Hes.] scutum) than the violent and somewhat rustic man of action, which is how he appears in Athens, where his introduction to a cultured Olympian life seems singularly unconvincing, though it was clearly an important element in the Athenian view of him, and it was in Archaic Athens that he was thought first to have been worshipped as a god. From Athenian art one might judge that his apotheosis was there thought to depend on his role in the gigantomachy, where he is exceptionally prominent. There is no hint in any of the scenes of any role as saviour of mankind; it would perhaps have been foreign to the spirit of Archaic narrative at any rate. If Peisandros' epic or Stesichoros' poems had any effect on his iconography, it cannot be identified, and must be judged unlikely. Where art and literature can be closely matched, as in [Hes.] scutum or Stesichoros' Geryoneis, the dissimilarities are more obvious than the similarities (cf. Boardman, J., AntK 19, 1976, 11-13).

Classical Period (c. 475-325 B.C.)

BIBLIOGRAPHY: Furtwängler, A., ML 12 (1886-1890) 2153-2176. 2222-2242 s.v. 'Herakles'; Scheffold/Jung, SB IV; Vollkommer, R., Herakles in Greek Art of the Classical Period (1988) - for the fullest discussion and list of monuments.

The fifth century sees the establishment in art, however insecurely, of the Twelve Labours. The choice for the metopes on the Temple of Zeus at Olympia (1705) was to prove influential, but not immediately and the grouping of Labours remains long haphazard and 'incomplete' (see Commentary to section IV A).

Athen's and Athena's special relationship with the hero survives, but it is muted. The more monstrous Labours and encounters are less to Classical taste, and the exceptional Archaic emphasis on H.'s closeness to the goddess is relaxed. That several of his Labours decorate metopes on the Hephaisteion (1706) seems uncharacteristic and old-fashioned, recalling the Athenian Treasury at Delphi (1703); a few appear again on a relief from Sunium (1708, of disputed date, however). On Athenian vases his Labours are sporadically shown: the Lion (1890-1892. 1917. 1925), Hydra (2009. 2039), Boar (2132), Deer (2196. 2197), Bull (2309-2312. 2350-2352), Geryon (2474), Kerberos (2624). The Amazon Labour retains hints of the Archaic expedition (→ Amazones 88. 89*); there is a duel on the Hephaisteion (→ Amazones 99) and the winning of the belt is ignored. The Hesperides Labour (2702. 2703. 2718-2725) takes on a new dimension towards the end of the 5th cent. with the already rejuvenated H. shown peacefully receiving the apples from the Hesperides. This is a significant change in attitude to the hero. It is echoed in scenes of his apotheosis. This could still be shown in the Archaic manner (2867-2871. 2873-2875) but for the first time he appears on the pyre, and soon thereafter being lifted to Olympus, rejuvenated, by chariot (section VIII C-H).

Other significant novelties in Athens are the number of scenes with Hebe on Olympus (section IX J), though the identity of the Hebe is seldom certain, and the many 'court' scenes (section IX Q) where he is seen with a variety of gods, heroes and quasi-mortals. He is frequently to be seen being congratulated and crowned, especially by Nike (section X s.v.), and these scenes may relate to the end of his Labours and apotheosis rather than terrestrial successes. The artists seem to be presenting him more often as a god, but not as other gods, and the 4th cent. in particular dwells on his initiation at Eleusis (section II E 1. 2). His worship in Athens is indicated by the scenes, on reliefs and vases, of H. in or by a columnar shrine (section II D 1), and the special associations of the 'Palaimon' scenes (section X s.v.) which may reflect a new Athenian cult. There are other scenes too of him being worshipped or in cult, on vases and reliefs (273. 275. 310.

326*-330. 333*. 617*. 760*. 761. 3152. 3189. 3201. 3479, section II D 2). It cannot be said that his role in Athenian theatre promoted much in art (see above) but for the notable actor on the Pronomos vase, though his developing relationship with Dionysos and his satyrs (section IX G) conceals a number of scenes possibly inspired by satyr plays.

His role in Athens' affairs is still perceptible and he stood with Athena in the Marathon painting of the Painted Stoa (3151). Amazonomachies are now more Theseus-centred, but their joint expedition to Amazonland was invented in the early 5th cent. and may occasionally be identified (section XI A, though not certainly in Athens after the Delphi Treasury). An interest in his sacrifice to Chryse en route to Troy (section V 1) may have been promoted by Athenian interest in Lemnos. Gigantomachies had been important in Athenian iconography, and may have taken on a special role in the iconography of Athenian success over Persia since they are prominent in Periclean and post-Periclean Athens; H. retains a central role beside Zeus and Athena (section IX R).

Many of the Archaic H. subjects either disappear or appear infrequently; new are scenes of babyhood, fighting the snakes (section III A), and at school and with Linos (section III C). The freeing of Theseus theme (section XI B) probably owes more to the importance of Theseus than to that of H. except perhaps in the three-figure relief (3518) which has to be interpreted in the light of its enigmatic companion reliefs.

Probably the most important development in H. iconography in the 5th/4th cent. is the proliferation of new statuary types for him as a votive or a cult figure. These are discussed in LIMC IV 792-793 and their regional significance is noted there.

In Corinth there are a few but interesting representations on vases, in the Wide Group (1096*. 1327*. 1352), a relief crater (2246) and in rf. (2934). Boeotia has him on some rf. vases (86*. 1537*. 1567. 3178) but also on several reliefs (331. 2619. 3203. 3459a. 3495) as well as the famous relief by Alkamenes of 403 (3099) and Praxiteles' pediments at Thebes with the Labours (1710). Samos had the Myron group (2876), perhaps an apotheosis, and the new Temple of Artemis at Ephesus several Labours and exploits on its columns (1707). In West Greece Lysippos' groups at Alyzia (1709) probably had most effect only after they reached Rome. In North Greece and Macedonia his importance to the royal family probably accounts not only for statuary types but the use of H. figures and heads quite freely on fine metalwork (e.g., 122, 123. 256*. 1090. 1770).

The Western Greek world is particularly rich in H. scenes, especially on the 4th cent. vases, though he continues to appear on clay reliefs also (as 1778. 1815, and → Kentauroi), and in sculpture (→ Gigantes 15*. 16*). On Apulian vases the Labours are well represented: 1812. 1876. 1918. 2010. 2346. 2423. 2504. 2571. 2572. 2615. 2686-2688. 2726-2728. And there is a fair range of other action scenes including scenes with Athena or Nike, and apotheosis following the Athenian model (2925. 2927-2930. 2933), the episode with the girdle of Hippolyte (→ Amazones 778a*. 781) as well as generalised Amazonomachies (→ Amazones 90*-92*), → Bousiris 3*-5, → Alkestis 18*, the suckling by Hera (→ Hera 301*), with Jason (2796) and confronting Skythes (2807). In less specific contexts there are several symposia (1494. 1509. 1515. 1523), scenes of worship and sacrifice (1335. 1345*. 1391*. 1392) and a number with him in the company of unidentified women (section II J 1). His attendance at the painting of his statue (271*) is notable.

On Lucanian vases there is slightly less interest but the Hippolyte scenes (→ Amazones 777. 778*) recur, and the interest in Bousiris (→ Bousiris 6*. 7*), while for another oddity → Kerkopes. Of the Paestan, apart from the phlyax scenes (see above) there is the remarkable madness (1684*; Trendall, RVP 84, 127. 89-90). Campanian also have Hippolyte (→ Amazones 779*. 780*). The Sicilian are more restricted: sacrifice (1339), some liveliness at Dionysiac parties (3226. 3227), and → Acheloos 259a*. The Indexes in Trendall's monographs are the fullest source for south Italian subjects with H.

On coins the subject of the baby strangling the snakes appears at Thebes (1619*. 1620. 1630-1632) and for the East Greek alliance (SYN) issue (1621*). Other Boeotian coins with H. are 1070. 1071. 1078. 1092*. In North Greece he remains an important subject, notably in the north-west, at Kyzikos (225. 1073*. 1663*. 1774) and Heraclea Pontica. He is rather more popular in the west, as at Heraclea Lucania. The Cretan 1067*. 1080*. 2699 are unexpected. He appears on few gems and fingerings (312*. 340. 341*. 422*. 423*. 569. 666. 771*. 926a. 1326*. 1348. 1767. 1768. 2698); the most notable is the unusual Greco-Persian with the dead Lion and ?Nemea (1920).

In the literature of Classical Greece H. begins to take on a new persona. There is more emphasis on his role as a saviour of mankind, in his ridding the earth of malevolent monsters and miscreants. He begins even to adopt the role of the tragic hero, wearied by his Labours, pitiable in his madness, rewarded for his life's work by rejuvenated ease in Olympus. Most of the representations reflect very little of this indeed, and many of the elements which do seem to reflect the literature were present before the Classical period: his ageing figure, for example, in bf. apotheosis scenes. In the 5th cent. there is certainly more emphasis on the rejuvenation, and the tiredness is made more explicit – we think of the Lion metope at Olympia (1919) and Lysippos figures of H. seated on his basket after the Augeias Labour (2300) and the Farnese type. The most moralising, philosophical new attitude to H. is expressed in Prodikos' invention of H.'s decision between Virtue and Vice, and this is totally ignored in ancient art (→ Hedone). H.'s role as protector of youth is little apparent, and his political and cult functions are more prominent in the many coins from cities which bore his name or worshipped him and, towards the end of this period, in the expression by various rulers of their assimilation to him, with or without alleged family ties.

Hellenistic Period

BIBLIOGRAPHY: Furtwängler, A., ML 12 (1886-1890) 2177-2183. 2242-2252 s. v. «Herakles»; Scheffold/Jung, SBIV.

The iconography of H. in the age of the Hellenistic kings is largely dominated by the rulers' interest in him as a model for their behaviour, with a degree of assimilation to him, begun with Alexander himself and typified by the representations of Alexander wearing H.'s lionskin on many series of Hellenistic coins. The kings of Pergamum must have been responsible for the new interest in stories associated with the founding of the city involving H.: → Auge, and → Telephos, both virtually ignored hitherto. Other Anatolian themes are strongly represented – Amazonomachies (→ Amazones 102*-110. 115*), many of them decorating Anatolian monuments and following the tradition of the Mausoleum frieze; and the story of → Omphale, another novelty of the Hellenistic period. H.'s symbolic role is well exemplified in the relief from Kyzikos showing him defeating a Celt (2813). His popularity in Anatolia is further shown by his appearance in the Myrina terracotta series (368*. 395*. 419*. 487*. 3357) and on grave reliefs (1112-1116). The Omphale story brings to the surface more explicit scenes of his love life (1557*. 1558*) and subjection to Eros (section X s. v.); and the Auge story may have helped popularise depictions of his drunkenness.

Although Hellenistic literature may have established a canonic order for the Labours, this is barely reflected in the few scenes of the cycle, in minor art (1711) and at Delphi (1712). It is mainly minor art – the clay relief bowls based on metal prototypes – that provides any numerous series of scenes of Labours (1802. 1816. 1922. 2048-2050. 2096. 2194. 2210. 2339. 2425. 2429. 2510. 2696. 2709. 2711). The principal statuary types ring the changes on types established in the 5th and 4th cents. (discussed in LIMC IV 793-794); a major innovation is the creation of H. herms (section I C 7) and the growing popularity of the reclining figures (section I C 4). In physical appearance the figures confirm the trend of the preceding period, to show him naked, with club and lionskin only, and increasingly often with facial traits determined by the Lysippos images.

In the west the Apulian (Calene) gutti and other relief vases carry many H. vignettes, less detailed than those of the homelands relief bowls (211. 213. 1611-1613. 2051. 2195. 2199. 2926. 2936. 2937. 3101. 3229 and → Omphale); see Pagenstecher, Calen and Jentel, Gutti, indexes. He remains a popular subject on metalwork, demonstrated by his common appearance on the plaster copies which were dispersed far from their homes, to Memphis in Egypt or Begram in modern Afghanistan (207. 216*. 1544*. 1755. 1827. 1966. 3420).

On coinage the range is much as it had been in the Classical period, with more in Anatolia and the west.

Note too his popularity in the burgeoning Hellenistic kingdom of distant Bactria (160*. 193. 195. 283*. 627. 738*. 946*). The H. head becomes a dominant type in many mints, typifying the dynastic H. which seems the dominant theme of the hero's iconography in this period.

Roman Period

The worship of H. in the Forum Boarium from early in the Republican period ensured for him a markedly different iconographic career from that he enjoyed in the Greek world, not, in this respect, differing greatly from the treatment of other Greek gods by Rome, but Greece had been more engaged by H. as a hero than an Olympian, and the Hellenistic fashion of assimilation of rulers to H. also secured for him a far more prominent position in scenes of state cult. The two other main areas of popularity are funereal, since his promotion to immortality held a convenient and welcome message for a people more concerned with such matters, and the Dionysiac/Bacchic. The total disparity of these interests make of him as interesting a study of diversity in iconography as in cult and popular belief.

Statues of H. in Rome (see discussion in LIMC IV 794-795) proliferated from the spoils of Greece which served temples and public spaces, and were multiplied by the many copies (cf. 446) and pastiches of the Classical and Hellenistic types which were thereafter created – the great gilt statues (as 302*. 372*) or colossal figures (as 652* and the Farnese 702*, even the boy H. 1236*). H. is a frequent companion of Roman emperors, especially in cult scenes (1579*) and on coins and medallions: these appear in mints throughout the empire. Medallions and contorniates offer some striking subjects: Hadrian, 390*; Antoninus Pius, 284*. 918. 3204. 3487; → Cacus 1*; → Kentauroi; Marcus Aurelius, 1433*. 3487; → Cacus 2*, → Kentauroi; Lucius Verus, 740. 2540; Commodus, 2172. 3487; Septimius Severus, 2785; Geta, 635; Maximian, 410, → Kentauroi; contorniates, 1696*. 2408. 2409. 2413. 3198. 3418. 3504, → Kentauroi. (For H. on Roman coins and medallions see Voegtli, Heldenepen.) He is plentifully represented on gemstones, commonly head alone or figures deriving from statuary types – these must have been popular gifts at all levels of society, from the imperial family who adopted him to young athletes (for whom he shared a protective role with Hermes/Mercury). These are mainly produced in Italy. He is also especially well represented in a more peculiarly Roman decorative genre, the clay Campana relief plaques (339. 386a*. 452. 1058. 1434*. 1435. 1955. 2076. 2389. 3064; → Hesione, Telephos).

In Rome he is a common subject of paintings and mosaics (e.g., 473*. 2059. 2643. 2743. 2790. 3191. 3192. 3285. 3346; → Acheloos 260*; → Alkestis 24*. 25. 31. 32; → Antaios I 39; → Auge 19; and at Ostia, 3246). The same is overwhelmingly true of Pompeii and Herculaneum, where the surviving material is far more plentiful but the style and subject matter of the paintings probably more often reflect the interest in their Greek originals (few are in the more characteristically Roman landscape style) than any particular Roman interest in individual scenes: 554. 630. 927. 1478. 1539. 1572. 1655. 1656. 1693. 1694*. 2742. 2770. 2771. 2791. 2911. 3261. 3337. 3397. 3422. 3429-3431. 3456; → Aleos 5*?; → Auge 12*-15; → Hesione, Nessos, Omphale, Prometheus, Telephos. (See Scheffold, WP index.) Other sites in Italy are rich in statuary, as Tivoli (659*. 872a. 1175*. 1179*. 1227*) and Alba Fucens (986*).

In North Africa the major media are sculptural or mosaic. Leptis Magna is rich in statuary and relief (335. 353. 447. 469. 508. 656. 682. 1194. 1540. [Dodekathlos] 1726. 1942. 2841. 3247). Mosaics are more distributed and include two with the Dodekathlos (1739. 1740; other subjects, 325. 1430. 1599. 3484; → Auge 16*. 17*; and cf. the painting at Zliten, 2530). Spain too had sculptural Dodekathlos (1748. 1751. 1753) and mosaic (1741. 1742). Mosaic is the popular monumental medium for the western provinces (617a. 1689. 1713. 1951. 2061. 2432. 3262. 3358; → Acheloos 261*; → Antaios I 40*-41; → Auge 18*. 20).

In homeland Greece major representations depend very much on the continuing Hellenistic tradition: in major sculpture, the Dodekathlos at Corinth (1746) or the Sparta herms (1109*-1111) and the many versions of Classical and Hellenistic cult and votive statues. In Paros there are mosaics (2163. 2226b) but the majority of the H. scenes are to be found in minor art. In Asia Minor the record is somewhat richer and a very large proportion of the Imperial coins with H., alone or in addition, are from eastern mints (see Voegtli, Heldenepen). The new Aphrodisias reliefs will prove a major source. In Syria the Antioch mosaics may be singled out (1053*. 1600*. 3253. 3254).

Scenes and cycles of H.'s Labours on sarcophagi of the later 2nd to 4th cents. are the most notable demonstration of H. iconography of the period and presumably reflect the message of immortality won through courageous achievement. There is far less emphasis in the Roman period on the support (even if only moral) given him by Athena/Minerva than there had been in the Archaic and Classical Greek periods. (In general see SarkRel III 1; Koch/Sichtermann, RömSark 148-149.) Some 40 Roman sarcophagi carry the Dodekathlos (see 1714-1724. 1734. 1752) and a significant number of Asiatic (1725. 1730-1733) which swell the record of Asia Minor. Other H. scenes also figure on the sarcophagi (2944. 3068. 3248. 3258-3260. 3263-3265. 3269-3275. 3277. 3278. 3402; → Alkestis F. G; → Amazones 122*-138; → Hesione, Kentauroi, Prometheus).

Other popular media for H. scenes in the Roman period are clay lamps (mainly for simple groups showing the Labours: 1932. 1965. 1984. 2081-2083. 2164. 2165. 2224. 2267. 2372. 2641. 2761. 2784); relief vases include series showing the Dodekathlos (1754) and individual Labours (1964. 2077-2080. 2228. 2256. 2391. 2395. 2759. 2760. 2783); stucco reliefs (2071. 2366. 2454. 2654. 2774. 2775. 2799. 3194. 3280. 3289. 3290. 3485; → Amazones 117.

118). Of the many coin types we may single out his special popularity with Antoninus Pius ([Dodekathlos] 1760, Alexandria), with Gordian III ([Dodekathlos] 1729, Hadrianopolis), with Postumus at Cologne ([Dodekathlos] 1761), at Perinthos and Heraclea Pontica.

Of the various H. subjects which enjoy special favour in the Roman period we may notice his encounter with the snakes while a baby (section III A), the many Bacchic scenes in which he is a participant or equal partner to Bacchus (section IX G), his relationship with Eros (section X s. v.), → Alkestis (sarcophagi and tomb paintings), → Auge, Cacus, Omphale, Telephos.

It is not easy to know where to end any survey of H. iconography in the Classical world. He is prominent among the various Classical themes in Coptic art (textiles - 1550a. [Dodekathlos] 1744. 1928. 2060. 2227. 2251. 2271. 3499, → Nessos; the relief 2371). He is seen on late ivory reliefs (654*. 1596*. 1974), and latest of those listed here, on St Peter's throne in the Vatican ([Dodekathlos] 1759), and the Byzantine casket (931*). He survives strongly into the Dark Ages retaining his identity as a Classical hero and god and even many of his exploits, more strongly than most other Classical divinities except perhaps Pan; H. scenes contribute to Christian iconography (H. and a Hesperid at the tree, for Adam and Eve) and, with other mortal sons of gods, contributes even to the details of apocryphal versions of the life of Christ (cf. Toynbee, A. J., A Study of History VI [1939] 465-476). He never truly disappears from Western art, or has to be rediscovered, nor are any of his Classical roles, as saviour of mankind, as model for kings, as tragic hero, ever forgotten.

HERAKLES (CYPRI)

L'épigraphie chypriote n'a encore livré aucune attestation du nom d'H. avant l'époque hellénistique et, si l'on met à part une notice d'Hésychius (Hesych. s. v. Málaka) où il est indiqué que les habitants d'Amathonte appelaient H. «Malika» (mot formé sur le sémitique MLK, «roi, seigneur», plutôt que d'après le nom du dieu → Melqart), aucun texte littéraire antique n'évoque de culte ou d'aventures mythologiques d'H. à Chypre. Pourtant, les images d'un dieu figuré sous l'aspect de l'H. grec ont connu un succès considérable à Chypre entre le milieu du VI<sup>e</sup> s. et le IV<sup>e</sup> s. av. J.-C.

COMMENTAIRE

Les représentations d'H. sont, à Chypre, les premières qui se rattachent à l'iconographie des divinités grecques et, entre le VI<sup>e</sup> et le IV<sup>e</sup> s., elles forment la série la plus abondante des dieux masculins, bien avant les «Baal-Hammon» (→ Ammon) et les «Bès» (→ Bes [Cypri et in Phoenicia]). Leurs particularités iconographiques et le contexte religieux chypriote indiquent que le personnage doit, dans la plupart des cas, être interprété comme un dieu local et non comme une simple image de l'H. grec.

C'est, semble-t-il, à Golgoi et Idalion, dans la partie centre-est de l'île, que sont sculptés les premiers H.: à Golgoi le dieu est figuré en archer (1–3), à Idalion plutôt en maître des lions (7), mais dans les deux cas la dépouille de lion posée sur la tête et nouée autour de la taille indique que l'artiste se réfère à un même modèle. Pour le reste, on note surtout des différences avec la tradition grecque: ces sculptures en ronde bosse sont des ex-voto qui représentent le dieu dans une attitude faussement active, puisqu'il ne se sert pas de son arc et qu'il n'est nullement en danger devant le petit lion qu'il tient contre lui. Ces représentations sont en fait l'aboutissement d'une série d'images qui, dans l'art chypro-phénicien antérieur, évoquaient sous diverses formes la puissance d'un dieu ou d'un héros au nom indéterminé: l'archer, qui brandit un casse-tête ou une hache fenestrée, apparaît sur les coupes en argent du VII<sup>e</sup> s. sous l'aspect du Pharaon vainqueur (Markoe, G., Phoenician Bronze and Silver Bowls from Cyprus and the Mediterranean [1985] 45–47 avec bibl.), le tueur ou le maître des lions sur ces mêmes coupes (→ Bes [Cypri] 14), mais aussi sur un relief en terre cuite de Kazaphani (Karageorghis, V., RDAC 1978, 181 n° 207 pl. 47) ou, dans l'art chypriote, sous la forme d'un kouros nu maîtrisant le fauve (un exemplaire provient de Salamine, les autres de Samos, Rhodes, Cnide, Naucratis; deux statuettes de Palaepaphos et Kition montrent le personnage vêtu). Un seul document (6) témoigne d'un essai pour associer l'arc au lion (ici dédoublé) avant que l'adoption de la massue brandie détermine l'image de l'H. chypriote «canonique» (9–15); dans la plupart des cas le dieu est représenté imberbe.

L'opinion la plus répandue veut que les images chypriotes d'H. se rapportent au culte du dieu phénicien Melqart; pourtant, quand un même sanctuaire a livré des dédicaces inscrites et des statues au type d'H., la divinité est nommée en grec → Apollon (Golgoi, Idalion, Voni), exceptionnellement → Zeus (Golgoi), ou en phénicien → Reshef (Idalion): le sanctuaire de Kition-Bamboula, souvent considéré comme un exemple déterminant, n'a livré en fait aucune dédicace à Melqart (mais Reshef y est mentionné, associé à As-tarté, dans une inscription du British Museum), pas plus que le sanctuaire d'Amrit, sur la côte syrienne, où le dieu paraît nommé Shadrapha (→ Satrapes) ou → Eschmoun. L'identité du personnage figuré sur les monnaies de Kition et de Lapithos est incertaine, mais son attitude (arc dans la main g. tendue et massue brandie dans la dr., voir Yon 2, 291 fig. 4) s'inscrit dans la tradition du «Pharaon» vainqueur des coupes chyprophéniciennes. À Kition-Bamboula un «Zeus» tenant, semble-t-il, un foudre et un aigle est associé aux H., alors qu'à Golgoi, Idalion ou Lefkoniko des représentations d'un dieu-bélier trônant, généralement appelé Baal-Hammon par les modernes, étaient offertes avec celles d'H.; dans tous les cas le dieu local, qui n'a reçu que tardivement un nom définitif, pouvait être évoqué sous des formes différentes, celle de l'H. grec indiquant clairement sa toute-puissance contre les forces hostiles et maléfiques, probablement aussi son caractère chthonien de dieu qui meurt et renaît: on pense alors à celui que les Grecs ont appelé → Adonis, d'autant plus que, généralement, une divinité féminine reçoit un culte dans les sanctuaires «héracléens» de Chypre.

Les représentations des exploits du héros grec sont rares, mais homogènes pour la provenance (Golgoi) et la date (fin VI<sup>e</sup>-début V<sup>e</sup> s.). Seuls trois sujets sont attestés dont l'un, la lutte contre le lion de Némée (25-26), est si étroitement lié aux images plus nombreuses du dieu maîtrisant un petit lion que l'on peut mettre en doute la véritable intention de l'artiste. Quant à l'histoire des troupeaux de Géryon (27) et à la lutte contre l'hydre (28-29), est-ce un hasard si la première se situe dans l'ambiance du monde phénicien occidental (voir Karageorghis, V., dans Y. Yadin Memorial Volume [1989] 92-97) et si l'autre a des antécédents orientaux évidents? Le plat de Palaepaphos (28) pourrait bien être un précieux témoin de la rencontre, au début des «âges obscurs», entre les mythes du Proche-Orient et la civilisation grecque.

HERCULE

Etr. Hercle (genitive Hercles), Herkle, Heracle, Herecele, Hercele, Herchle; Old Latin (Preneistine) Hercles, Hercele, Hercle[s] (see Wachter, R., Altlateinische Inschriften [1987] 133-136 §§ 55e. 56d; 149 § 62e; 225 § 86c; 268 § 110h; 381 § 175; 409-410 § 192a-b; 419 § 194b); for different forms in Italic dialects see Vetter, E., Handbuch der italischen Dialekte (1953) 108. 151-153. 335. 339. 355; de Simone, Entlehnungen II 291 with bibl.; Poccetti, P., Nuovi documenti italici (1979) 51 no. 36; 164 no. 219 with bibl.; and this cat., 23.

The Etruscan name, Hercle, was adopted directly from the Greek, presumably Doric, Herakles. The name is attested on portable objects from c. 480 to the 2nd cent. B.C. The predominant form is Hercle (in four inscriptions genitive Hercles), and Herkle (the latter: 332. 263. 298); the remaining variants are found in one example (cf. Bayet 2; de Simone, Entlehnungen I, 70-79 with bibl.; II 149-151. 155-157. 158-169; Peter 2253 ff.; ThesLEtr I 173-176). The earliest form, Herecele, c. 480 B.C. occurs on 331 (cf. de Simone, C., in Interferenza linguistica, Atti del Convegno della Società Italiana di Glottologia [1977] 48-50 for the earliest phase of transmission of Greek name of H. into Etruscan).

Of the inscriptions, only few appear to have religious significance - the earliest, is a 5th cent. dedication on an Attic kylix (unpublished), Colonna 3, 436 n. 68 (forthcoming, J. Heurgon). The remaining are Hellenistic: e.g., Hercle on the 2nd cent. B.C. bronze liver from Piacenza (TLE<sup>a</sup> no. 719c; Pfiffig 1, 123-126; de Simone, Entlehnungen I, 77 (59); van der Meer, L. B., The Bronze Liver of Piacenza. Analysis of a Polytheistic Structure [1987] esp. 122-124, with bibl.; there, his name appears near Nethuns and adjacent to Maris and Letham); Hercles on 23 of the 3rd to 2nd cent. B.C., the dedications to Hercle on the 3rd to 2nd cent. Samnite statuette base (65a) from Venafro, and Hercle on a Manchester bronze base (1981.527, said to be from Pompeii, Pallottino, M., BSR 50, 1982, 183. 193-195 no. 72 pl. 22d. e; idem, StEtr 51, 1983, 609-611; van der Meer, o.c. 123). The inscription on the mirror 404 indicates the represented scene as adoption of H. by Uni. The epithet, Calanice, from the Greek, Καλλινυκος, was used in Vulci between the 5th and 4th cent. B.C. on four monuments [mirrors, gem: 176f. 316. 409, another mentioned in 259]; cf. Martelli, M., StEtr 54, 1986 [1988] 165-170.

Despite his name derivation from Greece, the Etruscan H. is neither the Greek Herakles of literary and figurative art nor a singular «Italic» divinity. He was more widely worshiped throughout Italy than any other hero-god. Iconographically, however, his nature varies from region to region in southeastern, central and northern Italy indicating the conflation of the Greek hero with local divinities. A detailed study of votive deposits of all the Italic regions would permit a final answer to the nature of his worship, origin, iconography, and evolution. The evidence indicates that his cult existed at health sanctuaries beginning earlier in the north, but in the south and east c. mid-4th cent. B.C., probably under influence from Magna Graecia. In Etruria Padana, the north, and east, anatomic ex-votos and water cults are coupled with H. votives. His connection with water appears in various contexts, in scenes with an amphora(ae), fountain(s), and spring(s), alone or together with others.

LITERARY SOURCES: There is no literary evidence for an Etruscan cult of H. The cult, nonetheless, must have spread throughout Italy (Diod. 4, 21, 1-3; Dion. Hal. ant. 1, 40, 6). Stesich. (1st half of the 6th cent. B.C.), in the Geryoneis (Page PMG fig. 185), reported that the hero journeyed along the Tyrrhenian coast (also Hellan., FGH 4 F 111; Diod. 4, 21, 1). The harbour at Cosa was named portus Herculis (Strabon 5, 2, 8 p. 225). In Rome, a sanctuary is suggested by 509 B.C. at the time of the dedication of the Capitoline temple, when Vulca, the sculptor from Veii, had been employed to make a Hercules ficitilis (Martialis 14, 178; Plin. nat. 35, 157). The earliest of three Latin cult sites was at the Porta Trigemina (foot of the Aventine) already by the 5th cent. B.C., implying an earlier establishment under Etruscan domain (Devoto 318-319; Radke 141; de Simone, Entlehnungen II 292; Piganiol 1261-1264). Van Berchem, D., «Hercule-Melqart à l'Ara Maxima», RendPontAcc 32, 1959/60, 61-68; idem, «Sanctuaires d'Hercule Melqart. Contribution à l'étude de l'expansion phénicienne en Méditerranée», Syria 45, 1967, 74-109. 307-338; Rebuffat, R., «Les Phéniciens à Rome», MEFRA 78, 1966, 7-48 see a Phoenician origin for the primitive cult of H. at the ara maxima in the Forum Boarium, introduced by cattle merchants trading in the ancient market. For a cult of H., proven by his name inscribed on a pocolom at Ardea, contrada Casalinnaccio, cf. Stefani, E., NotSc 1954, 12 fig. 12; Colonna, G., in ArchLaziale 6, 1984, 409 n. 59.

For other localities, Strabon (5, 2, 3 p. 220) reports hot springs in Caere from the Augustan Age. Springs near Caere were called fons Herculis by Liv. (22, 1, 10) and H. is said to have established the well of lacus Ciminus in Faliscan territory (Serv. Aen. 7, 697) through driving an iron lever into the earth.

COMMENTARY

All dates are B.C. unless otherwise stated.

Type/attributes

Hercle is recognized earliest in narratives in the 1st third of the 6th cent. B.C. by costume (lionskin), weapons (club and bow), and action (245) borrowed from Greece and the East. During the 6th cent. influences from Greece and the East were incorporated in a new manner (cf. Bayet 1, 37–49; Höckmann 2, 189–193; Richardson 340–342).

Hercle 413

Four types of the standing figure were created during the Archaic period. The first (13, 14), the so-called «Cypriote H. type» adopted a stiff, hieratic pose in which he raises an upright club in his r. hand and extends his l. foot forward. The lion's head forms a cap about his head, and the skin, a mantle about his body. The latter may be cinched in front at the waist. He is either nude (12a, 14, 15) or wears a chiton beneath the skin (13, 13a, 13c, 13d). Paws are usually knotted across his chest but might be suspended from either shoulder (13d) and he sometimes carries a bow and/or tail in his l. hand (12a, 13? 14b). Contrary to Cypriote versions, he is usually clean-shaven (exceptions: 14, 36, 41, 77: with moustache, 78: as previous).

In a second form, he battles an unseen foe while striding or running (usually with club in r. and bow in l. hand) depicted between the last quarter of the 6th cent. through the 4th cent. (33–40 with lionskin or nude; with bow and arrows in l., 115, 220; lion's tail in l., 297) in a version that stems from Archaic Greek art (→ Herakles 20, 26, 35, 39, 1089, 1091, 1092, etc.). He may strike with a club in his l. hand (282, 363; once, it is omitted, 164), but his weapons may vary (sword: 201, 208, 266, 293, 309: two swords, 346, 355, 294: lance; and shield: 35, 346). He wears hoplite garb (294: sword, shield) in one example. In a third style, inspired by Greek prototypes (→ Herakles esp. 20, 28, 29), he is nude (no lionskin) (19–20, 33). In a fourth, considered a local innovation, he wears a perizoma, a costume that may consist of a lionskin, either with the head over his genitals, or the skin wrapped, tied or twisted about his waist (16–17, 39–40, 42, 132) in the final quarter of the 6th to mid-5th cent. Sometimes it is a kilt or short mantle (18, 43, cf. Adam 50–51; Bayet 1, 31; Galli, E., StEtr 15, 1941, 27 ff.; Höckmann 2, 194 nn. 16–18).

Vulca, who, sometime before 509 B.C., was called from Veii to Rome, executed a statue of H. in terracotta (79) for a sanctuary. His work may have taken a «Cypriote» (12–14) or perizoma (132) form (on the problem: André, A., RendPontAcc 49, 1976/77, 63–83; Colonna 2, idem, PP 36, 1981, 41–59; Cristofani, M., Prospettiva, o.c. 77, 2–3).

In a transitional work (15), one lion forepaw rests on his r. shoulder, and the animal's head, and the other forepaw, on his l. shoulder and arm, respectively. Early Classical specimens are clean-shaven, with or without a lionskin cap (15–21, 39–40, 42–43, 50) and weapons (bow, arrow, quiver and club). A promachos pose combined with his holding apples was a local creation c. 400 B.C. (27–29, for attribution to northern Italic workshops, cf. Gualandi, o.c. 27, 293–309, esp. 305 ff.; Colonna, AnnFaina 1, 1983, 176–177).

The bombarding scheme was modified in other ways: in one form, the lionskin cap extends over the l. shoulder (22–28) and/or l. arm (29–30) c. 375 B.C. (→ Herakles 15, 22, 23, 304–305, 404–405, 465–466, 614, 861) and evolved between the 5th and 1st cent. in schematic bronzes (ex votos). Eventually, the skin was reduced to a small kerchief suspended from his l. forearm (31, 32, cf. → Herakles 1097 [cf. discussion of problems of chronology and provenance, Leibundgut, o.c. 31; 32, 66, → Herakles 614, 772, 774, 777–783, 835–839]). Numerous finds from Umbro-Sabellian and Samnite sanctuaries date between the end of the 6th cent. and late Hellenistic period (cf. votives in Bibl. esp. Colonna 1; Di Niro, o.c. 31, 9–26; Comella 770–771; and northern Italic regions, Tombolani, o.c. 31a, 68–69; Torcello near Venice, and Trieste, Este, Gurina).

Two further mutations of the lionskin cap occurred: a) the lion's jaws were enlarged to form a «collar» (26, 28a–b, 54a, b: many are Sabellian but found from Campania to northern Italy, perhaps dated from the 5th to 1st cent., → Herakles 614); and b) knobs (one to three) project from atop his head (32, 55).

Other head gear includes a diadem or wreath (9, 64, 101, 104, 123, 130, 375, 401, floral wreath: 66), a fillet (7, 41, 51a, 63, 74, 173, 188, 264, 406) and depend on Greece or S. Italy (cf. vases of c. 530 B.C. and S. Italian coin types, → Herakles 97, 98).

Between the 5th and 4th cent., a kneeling, assailing H. (33, → Herakles 34) was derived from a Greek source. The apples (sometimes pomegranate, 28, 28d, 54d) replaced the bow (34, 35, 258b) in the l. hand in the 4th cent. and he might hold a phiale or patera (114, 130, 258, 405, 406, 410), cup (65, 74), kantharos (64, 66, 66a), or drinking horn (62, 62a–e) (cf. Greek prototypes, → Herakles 757–758, 763–764, 769, 771, 782, 784, 822, 823).

Occasionally, he wore a cuirass in the 2nd half of the 6th cent. (41: differs from Greek models, → Herakles 48, 73, 1066, 1069, and Caeretan hydriae, Hemelrijk, o.c. 169, no. 23 pl. 88 and n. 284). Later, he was clad in a muscle cuirass in Central Etruscan and Praenestine 4th cent. images (67, 91, 180, 183, 242) with a lionskin outside and a short chiton beneath (cf. Archaic Greek forms → Herakles 54–56, 60–61, 1096).

The figure in repose in a variety of media made between the 5th and 1st cent. (a vase, mirror, gems, and terracotta votives, 44–45, 47–49, 50–54, 56–59, 60, 63–67) was also inspired by Classical or Hellenistic models. He is clean-shaven (48, cf. discussion Herakles 310, 319, 655 and Cherchel stance, → Herakles 428–430 p. 791) – usually with the weight on the r. leg (exceptions, 46, 48, 51, 56, 57a, 59), either with a lionskin cap or the skin suspended from the l. shoulder or forearm (44–67). A bearded image (47, 52, 60) re-emerged in the late Classical and Hellenistic periods. From the 1st quarter of the 5th cent., variations include: the club in up in the r. hand, bow in the l. (43); r. hand on hip, l. extended (missing)? (44); r. hand on downed club, l. on hip (59, cf. → Herakles 603, 612–615 and p. 758, discussion of a Polycleitan H. with literature, 792) or reversed with the other hand extended or holding the bow, cup (63–66b, 74, cf. → Herakles 754–860), apples, or horn (45–67) (hand extended 52, cf. → Herakles 758, 763, 771, 769, 1345, bow or apples 45–51, cf. in S. Italy c. 385 B.C.: → Herakles 271–542, 770–773). Commonly, the club is down in his r. hand with or without a lionskin over the l. forearm in bronzes and gems (54–56, 58, 60) – often apples are in the l. hand (cf. Herakles «Albertini», «Hope», → Herakles, LIMCIV 271. 310, and p. 792). Less frequently, the club is up, resting on a shoulder with the opposite hand extended (44. 57, in Greece, → Herakles 655 pp. 766. 792: introduced c. 400 B.C., and Staccioli, R. A., ArchCl 9, 1957, 26–43). A version with a cup or horn in the r. hand and club or apples in l. (62–67 cf. discussion and bibliography, → Herakles, LIMCIV p. 766).

A seated H. emulates Greek and S. Italian images (70. 318. 97, cf. → Herakles, LIMCIV pp. 773–774. 792: based on a 5th cent. Greek type) in which there too, he often holds a cup, horn or kantharos (72. 73. 101, → Herakles, LIMCIV 920, pp. 772. 792; for a connection with Dionysos, cf. 66. 75a. For 74. 75 cf. discussion of Lysippan Epitrapezios type in → Herakles, LIMCIV p. 774–775; De Visscher, F., Héraclès Epitrapezios [1962] [= AntCl 30, 1961, 167–129]).

A reclining symposiast H. dated in the 4th cent. (76) was found in context with a fertility and funerary cult dedicated to a female deity at the Cannicella sanctuary at Orvieto (cf. Colonna, o. c. 39, 17–19; for the type, → Herakles 1009. 1011. 1017–1025. 1049 and p. 777).

His head is represented on vases, bronzes, coins, and gems modeled after S. Italian and Greek works. A janiform head vase made in Volterra (9, c. 320 B.C.) is analogous to late 6th cent. Attic rf. works (cf. head vase. Matera, Mus. From Laterza. Neeracher, O., Kunst und Kultur der Westgriechen I [1971] 40 no. 69 fig.). Silver and bronze coinage with a facing (1. 2) or profile (2a. 3. 8) head are clean-shaven with the lion-skin cap or filleted (8) and are attributed to Populonia. Both (frontal and profile) coin types emulate S. Italian specimens (→ Herakles 115. 117. 120. 125; 97–98); «Hope Herakles» pp. 746. 791. Short curly hair is found on his head on a Volterranean kylix (3) and is related to Populonian coinage (cf. also → Herakles 92), while a three-quarter view on a Volterranean mirror (4) is close to late Classical Greek representations (→ Herakles 87). A bearded image, probably made in Bolsena, imitated Tarentine bronzes of the late Classical period (5, cf. → Herakles 218: late 4th cent., p. 792).

1. Hercle at a fountain

See also the amphora raft (337–341).

H. as a god of wells and baths was a favorite iconographic motif; scenes of H. at a fountain, with or without an amphora on mirrors, gems, and bronzes, (81–83, → Herakles, LIMCIV p. 797: literature, bibl.; cf. 87 and → Herakles 1325) began at the end of the 5th cent. The common threads are the amphora (88–92), fountain, and the sacred gathering. Companions may include a youth, Menerva, Vile (88) and/or Turms (89. 90), all three (91), or once, Uni (92). Apoll. Rhod.'s (4, 1436–1449) report that he created a spring from stepping on or kicking a rock is suggested by the scheme with his foot on an amphora (81–82). The intent of the episode with winged women and the amphora (93) is unclear (→ Herakles LIMCIV p. 797). A satyr and winged woman (97) pouring liquid over a seated, weary H. on a late 4th cent. Praeneste cista foot (97) was proposed as a lustration or Dionysiac (cf. 66. 75a. 76), although the interpretation cannot be proven.

The incident of his drawing water from a lion-head spout on gems (84–86. 94; one West Greek: 84c = Herakles 1326. 1327) cannot be identified with any certainty with the story of his creating springs on his return journey from fighting Geryon. And no ancient source seems to explain his altercation against a fountain (95; see, however, Serv. Aen.'s story [7, 697] that he established a spring through driving an iron lever into the earth). Ex votos found at springs, lakes, and other water sources (selected: terracotta, 49. 76 and bronze, 12a–13. 17. 18–28. 30–31. 39. 44. 51–52. 54–55. 57. 59. 62. 64–66) leave no doubt of his importance for apotropaic and healing water cults. For the discussion of the theme of a sacred conversation with a youth, Vile and/or Turms, cf. Sassatelli (30–31) and 140: with Vile; 146: with Turms; 113–114. 145: Menerva and Turms; 135. → Athena/Menerva 191. 136: Menerva and Vile; → Athena/Menerva 193. 195*.

H. leans over an altar perhaps at a louterion (99); and stands beside one (100), → Herakles, LIMCIV pp. 798–801.

3. Hercle with cornucopia

See also resting (70–72) and with an amphora or fountain (94. 97).

An incident (101) with a horn near his feet (and a satyr on the reverse) was inspired by S. Italian drinking or celebration scenes (→ Herakles, LIMCIV 1511 ff.; pp. 820–821; 1476).

4. Hercle with a woman

For narratives, see his family (→ Alkmene 19), his wives, Deianeira, in his altercation with Nessos (306–310), and with Hebe in apotheosis (405–407). Alkestis is uncertain (→ Alkestis 59), Auge is unknown in Etruscan art. He rescues Hesione (266–269), abducts Mlacuch (331), and is with Menerva in non-narrative (134) and narrative contexts with a child, Epiur, adolescent boy, Maris and other women (153–156). Turan also appears with him (360–361). For others, winged (389. 411–416) and unwinged (151. 394. 404. 408–410), crowning H., see the discussion on Olympus (405–416). He is paired with an unidentified woman on a janiform vase (9).

He accompanies anonymous women, seated (102–106. 108. 151. 367), leading (→ Alkestis 27. 29), walking or on horseback. He battles one (107) and rescues another (108, cf. 109. 361. → Herakles 1547–1556). For H.'s numerous Greek amorous affairs with women, → Herakles, LIMCIV p. 821; Brommer, Herakles II 117–129.

5. Hercle with a man

See Cacus, 276.

H. (110) converses with a man, once nude (146) and once with a seated bearded man (111). A bearded man and youth flank him in another unidentified encounter (112). → Herakles, LIMCIV pp. 824–825.

6. With deities, others

See also his apotheosis (393–399) and adoption (400–404).

a) Perhaps his earliest appearance in a non-narrative divine assembly is on a late 6th cent. Micali Group vase (122). The theme recurs on 4th–3rd cent. B.C. mirrors and Faliscan vases (116. 123). He is prominently paired with Menerva (113. 117–118. 133. 136, → Athena/Menerva 188), perhaps inspired by their close cult association (cf. for example, sculptural groups of the two at sanctuaries at Portonaccio in Veii [12. 132] and Sant'Omobono in Rome [131], perhaps a creation of Etruscan aristocracy [Colonna, → Athena/Menerva p. 1073; Colonna 3, 442 n. 84 bibl.]). Pfiffig (1, 349; cf. mirror, 120) suggested a love relationship between Menerva and H. Terracotta ex votos of each are found in the same cult contexts (deposits) with fertility and health associations from the 4th to 3rd cent. (e.g. Veii, Portonaccio sanctuary; Cerveteri, Vignaccia; and Minerva Medica in Rome, 49 and → Athena/Menerva 104. 125–126; Colonna 3, 429–431). They are in conversation together with an unidentified youth (91. 135. 136. 412, → Athena/Menerva 184. 188. 191). In two instances, the youth is named Vile; once he is with H. at the fountain (95 [v?jilece) and once in assembly with Laran (118). A youth, atypical for Vile, holds arrows on 136; for recent discussions, cf. Höckmann (o. c. 135, 41: Philoctetes) and Jurgeit (o. c. 97, 136–137). He is together with Vile (118, → Ares/Laran 26), Menerva and Laran which for some (→ Ares/Laran p. 505; Cristofani, Bronzi, 282) alludes to a military association. With Turms (113–114. 121–122), he is flanked by a Dionysiac group once (123), and is a bystander next to Turms (126) and on other examples (125. 124; → Aphrodite/Turan 33 = Apollon/Aplu 122; → Apollon/Aplu 60). He is paired with Turan and Aplu (115. 116). H. embraces Turan as Menerva looks on on one occasion (119).

b) With Menerva

See the non-narrative and divine conversation above.

The Greek concept of the goddess his patron and protector is evident in labors and apotheosis representations from the last quarter of the 6th and beginning of the 5th cent. The former include the Hydra (203), Gigantomachy (376. 377. 378. 380. 381. 382), Kyknos (295), Nereus (305), Nessos (306), and with Uni (366?). M. accompanies him in what may be the chariot ride to Olympus (392), and perhaps introduces him to deities on Olympus on a Velletri architectural terracotta (399).

During the 5th cent., they are together in an incident with children (157) as well as labors which include the Lion (189), Bull (228), Hesperides (262.

263. 264), and an encounter with Alkyoneus (→ Alkyoneus 33*).

In the 4th cent., they appear in love (406), abduction (351) and nurturing (154. 155. 156) incidents. There are fewer labors: the Lion (173. 174), Boar (209), Bird?, Amazon (244), and other adventures: Prumathe (318) and with the Minotaur (330), on Olympus (398a), with Hebe? (406) and with a winged woman on a Faliscan vase (412).

In the 3rd cent., narratives with a child(ren) continued. They are also together with women on Olympus (M. is present at his adoption by Uni, 403) and in one combat: Gigantomachy (383).

c) With Vile

See also Vile with H. at the fountain (88–92. 95), in conversation (118–119. 135. 138. 140–141), and with a Maris youth (159).

H. and Vile fight snakes as babes, as Vile replaced Iphikles (152). Vile might be the unnamed youth with H. in narratives of the Lion conflict, 169. 185; Hydra fight, 199. 200. 203; Amazon struggle, 242; Geryon encounter, 246; Hesperides adventure, 265; killing of Alkyoneus, 274; Centaur battle, 278; Kyknos skirmish, 295. 296; altercation with Nessos, 315; with the Minotaur, 330; apotheosis, 396. 397; adoption, 402; and crowning, 410.

H. sits or stands conversing with a youth bearing weapon(s) 136. Twice the youth is named Vilae (140. 410). In other pictures in which Vile is named (88. 90. 95. 118. 140. 159. 330. 410), health (amphora), youth (Maris hercle), and victory are implied themes (cf. Eur. Heraclidae 6, for Vile's arrival in Sardinia with the Heraclidae, and, for his worship in Etruria, → Iolaos/Vile). The «Ficoroni Cista» foot (144) has been suggested as H. with Vile and a winged demon (recently, Jurgeit, o. c. 97, 64–65. 138–140).

See also → Iolaos/Vile and Del Chiaro, M. A., AJA 59, 1955, 281–285; idem, Muse 15, 1981, 54–57.

d) With Turms

The pair converse in a landscape setting on a number of private monuments of the 5th–4th cent. in mirrors (145) and gems (146–147, cf. discussions by Del Chiaro 284–285 [144. 90a], Jurgeit 140–141, and Rebuffat-Emmanuel 43 ff. 513 ff.). Although the scheme lacks an amphora, the composition is similar to that with H. at the fountain, discussed above. See the bone relief of Turms, H. with the amphora, Menerva, and a warrior (91, Fischer-Graf 100 and Jurgeit, o. c. 97, 140–141).

Turms accompanies H. in the fight with the Bull (228), the Minotaur (328), and the Deer (222). Turms' presence with H. and Cerberos in one instance (256) may perhaps present the Greek report of his accompanying H. on the Hades adventure (Hom. Od. 11, 621 ff.). He is once depicted as a guide to Olympus (258) (cf. Brommer, Herakles II 96–97).

e) With Aplu

In addition to his accompanying H. in non-narrative divine assemblies (see section O.I.), Aplu is an adversary in the Deer conflict (220. 221. 222) and tripod (357) contest on 6th cent. monuments. There is a 5th cent. Deer scuffle (218) without Aplu and, in addition, two illustrations of the tripod skirmish (355. 358). 4th cent. works show Aplu and H. at Prumathe's rescue (317) and the tripod quarrel (356).

H. runs away, with the tripod slung over his l. shoulder, his club in his raised r. as Aplu, chasing, attempts to clasp his precious attribute. The scheme on early 5th cent. vases (355) and a gem (→ Apollon/Aplu 16) resembles that on a metope from the Heraion at Foce del Sele in S. Italy (→ Apollon 1029* = Herakles 2969; and a rf. Attic oinochoe by the Kleomelos Painter c. 490 B.C., → Herakles 3031). Zazoff (EtrSk 23) points to an Andokides Painter prototype.

On bronze cista feet, the pair are reversed as H. follows A. (358) where both hold the kettle (Brommer, Herakles II n. 58: Vasenlisten 40, 2, → Herakles 3007). They tug at the tripod while moving away from one another on a later 5th cent. gem (→ Apollon/Aplu 15) and 4th cent. krater (356). In an excerpt H. alone flees with the tripod on a 5th cent. vase (353) and gems (354).

f) With Juno/Uni

His kinship with → Juno Sospita is ambivalent; he is shown in altercations as protagonist as well as encounters at peace (362–367). She accompanies him on Olympus (395–397) and adopts (400–404) him.

There are non-narrative depictions of the two-some – Juno is dressed as Juno Sospita – between the 6th and 4th cent. (150–151).

She was first a foe, then later, a friend to H. The acrimony between the two is explained in literature from Homer to Ovid (cf. Brommer, Herakles II 108). She watches as H., a child, strangles snakes sent by her on a Faliscan vase (152). Later, in his adult life, as Juno Sospita, she battles him on an amphora by the Paris Painter (362) and a fragment by a follower of the Caeretan hydriae workshop (363). Then, he rescues Juno from an onslaught of satyrs in 6th and 5th cent. scenes (366. 367) that depend on S. Italian prototypes (cf. metopes from the Heraion at Foce del Sele, c. 550/40 B.C. → Hera 328* = Herakles 3348a; and the Attic rf. cup by the Brygos Painter, c. 490/80 B.C., → Hera 327 = Herakles 3348; and sculptural columen fr. from the Temple B facade at Pyrgi, 77). Their affable relationship is supported by his having founded a temple to Hera Lakinia (cf. Diod. 4, 24, 7; Serv. Aen. 3, 552) and their worship together at Pyrgi, Caere, Veii, Falerii, and Tarquinia (cf. Comella; Dury-Moyaers/Renard).

g) Eros

H. is crowned by male and female, winged and un-winged demons. Although H. crowned by Eros appears in Attic and S. Italian vase painting, in Etruria, a nude, winged youth in late 5th to mid-4th cent. works (368–370. 291) is similar but cannot be identified with any certainty as the Greek Eros. Crowning from behind occurs (368) and is similar on S. Italian vases and coins (→ Eros 913–919). For the figure riding on

H.'s back (370), cf. Brommer, Herakles II 36 and n. 36 and → Eros 914.

h) Fufluns, satyrs, Pan, maenad

H.'s association with Fufluns is vague but known in the 4th cent. Satyrs masquerade as H. on an amphora raft (337–341) on 4th to 3rd cent. scarabs. Zazoff (EtrSk 122–123) saw the phenomenon as the influence of a S. Italian H.–Silen cult. H. parodies in satyr-plays were popular in S. Italy. They rob his weapons in Attic rf. and S. Italian vases of the late 6th–4th cent. (→ Herakles 3230–3238, cf. McPhee, I, AntK 22, 1979, 38–42). A robbery is possible in a scheme showing a youth who may be stealing the slumbering hero's quiver on a 4th cent. Praeneste mirror (372), and similarly, on an Apulian rf. oinochoe (→ Herakles 3498, c. 360 B.C.; an old enmity between H. and the thiasos? in Schauenburg, K., Gymnasium 70, 1963, 118 n. 25). A celebration with Pan, a youth, and woman (maenad?) is depicted on a 2nd cent. Kranzspiegel-gruppe mirror (373) and may have been influenced by S. Italian satyr plays. There, Dionysos and H. stood together surrounded by a chorus (cf. Brommer, Herakles II 102–103 nn. 62–63). Bound satyrs, on 374, are not repeated in Etruria, and the interpretation is uncertain (cf. the preparation of Silen prisoners led before king Midas with H. in Schauenburg, K., RM 90, 1983, 351 nn. 111–113 pl. 85, 4; others, without H.: Schefold, SB II 73 fig. 90; idem, SB III, 172–173 n. 337, see Marsyas seated, bound, ibid., fig. 233).

Perhaps the reclining terracotta cult figure from the Cannicella sanctuary in Orvieto (76) refers to a kinship with Fufluns resembling their worship at Vulci (75a) where a cult of Dionysos seems to have been imposed in the 4th cent. after that of H. (cf. de Cazanove, o. c. 75a, 7–36).

i) Gigantomachy

The Gigantomachy with H. was depicted from the beginning of the 5th to early 3rd cent. H. fights toward the r., ahead of Menerva (376–378. 380–383). As a rule, his weapons are club and bow (376. 379. 380) but in two instances, a severed arm (381–382; used by Menerva, → Gigantes pp. 252. 256; a boulder on 377).

j) With the Tinas Cliniar

See Castur in H.'s rescuing Prumathe (316). A 3rd cent. mirror (→ Dioskouroi/Tinas Cliniar 49*) seems to present H. (winged) conversing with the twins. In decorative art, two youths are pendant with H. and a woman on 5th cent. bronzes (367, → Dioskouroi/Tinas Cliniar 14–15; cf. terracotta vase handles [108] from S. Italy [151]; Jannot, J., RA 1977, 3–22; Adam 63–66).

7. Family life, Hercle as an infant

Two 4th cent. vases (152. 152a) follow closely H. as a babe fighting the snakes on Greek vases (→ Herakles 1651). On one (152), Vile replaced the Greek Iphikles (→ Hera p. 713, → Herakles, LIMC IV pp. 827–828). Vile (portrayed as Iphikles), frightened, moves away toward a woman (probably Alkmene) while H. fights the snakes. Menerva is missing on the first but present on the second. In both depictions, the babies are on the ground instead of a kline of Greek prototypes (→ Herakles, LIMC IV p. 831 for commentary). As an adult, he fights snakes in bronzes (342–347). The struggle, however, could demonstrate another (unknown) exploit.

8. With wives

See Deianeira in → Nessos (306–310) adventure; Hebe is uncertain in Etruscan representations, cf. H.'s introduction into Olympus and adoption (394. 405–407). For lit. sources and bibl. → Herakles, LIMC IV pp. 821–824. 834–835. Iole, Megara and Omphale cannot be identified.

9. With Epiur, Maris hercles

Menerva and H. are prominently together with a baby on a series of 4th–3rd cent. mirrors attributed to Vulci and North Etruria. The interpretation of the event is speculative and the relationship between H. and the child uncertain. In one instance, both Menerva and H. hold a child (155). In others, H. carries a child while Menerva looks on (154) or has her arm about H.'s shoulder (156). Menerva is missing in some (153. 154a). H. lifts an adolescent on one (157). In two occasions, once as a baby and again as an adolescent, Epiur is named (153. 157). Another child, Maris, is named on a mirror (338: H. is below the main scene on an amphora raft); three babies are named Maris with epithets, husrana (young) [1?/halna (uncertain = young?) and isminthians. In another (159), H. (a patera in his r. hand) is flanked by Vile, Aplu, Artumes and young Maris Hercles («Maris son of Hercle» cf. van der Meer, o. c. 159, 123: Maris is an assistant god). H.'s foot is on a dead boar. This, the patera, and his companions, Vile, Aplu and Artumes suggested an initiation of youth (Maris) to Versnel (Visible Religion 4/5, 1985/86). Pfiffig (I, 351–352) saw Epiur and Maris as iconographically similar. Both Pfiffig (I, 258: Menerva as a chthonic, fertility deity) and Hermansen (152–154. 156–157) thought of H. and Menerva as nurturers and parents of the child(ren). For these and other discussions see also → Maris.

10. Dodekathlon and other exploits

The Dodekathlon in a series of episodes as a narrative cycle as it is known in Greek art is non-existent. However, at least two encounters, the Lion (162) and Bull (229: cf. Geryon, 247) decorated a large building at Acquarossa – perhaps under the inspiration of the S. Italian metopes from the Heraion at Foce del Sele, or Olympian shield bands.

Of the Twelve Labours, the Lion Labour is the most common. Deer, Hydra/snake?, Kerberos, Amazons, and Hesperides are popular, while the Boar, Birds, Bull, Geryon, and Horses of Diomedes are infrequent.

The earliest narratives cannot be certain without the god's attributes (lionskin, club, bow) and hints as to mythological context. Several representations from the late 7th to early 6th cent. B.C. remain conjectural: the Hydra (204. 205), Bull (230), and Geryon (246). The first clearly identified skirmishes are Alkyoneus (274) and Geryon (245). Both were probably made at Vulci under inspiration from Corinthian vase painting. The iconographic types from the 1st half of the century are influenced by Peloponnesian as well as E. Greek sources perhaps with S. Italy (274?) as an intermediary.

In the 2nd half of the 6th cent., the number of canonic Labours increased to include the Lion, Hydra, Deer, Bull, Geryon and Kerberos. Visual narratives appeared in coastal centers as well as the interior (162–164. 169. 171. 182. 198–222. 229–230 = 246 = 274. 245. 247. 250: Acquarossa, Caere, Perugia, Pyrgi, Rome, Tarquinia, Veii, Velletri, Vulci, etc.).

The favored encounters accent his adversarial role and brute strength – many concern cattle or water themes (encounters other than Labours): Acheloos, Alkyoneus, Pholos, Kyknos, Nereus, Nessos, Triton, and the Gigantomachy. H. appears in place of Theseus with the Minotaur. Some altercations, as the unique melee with a rabbit monster, have no explanation. Others were of special local interest: Aplu and the tripod contest, Juno Sospita, and his introduction and journey to Olympus.

In the 5th cent. incidents illustrating the Labours include the Lion, Hydra, Deer, Bull, Horses, and Kerberos. The Boar and Hesperides were introduced, while Geryon was no longer represented (Augeias was never illustrated). The other narrative encounters are with Acheloos, Antaios, Pholos, Kyknos, Triton, Minotaur, the tripod contest, Gigantomachy, and on Olympus. Adventures with Juno Sospita, Mlacuch, Pakste (Pegasos), a snake, youths, infants or children, and the amphora raft are also depicted.

In the 4th cent. the Labours take in the Lion, Hydra, Boar, Deer, Birds, Horses, Amazon, Kerberos, and Hesperides. Other adventures represent Hesione, Acheloos, Kyknos, Nereids, Nessos, Triton, Prumathe (Prometheus), Strymon, Pakste, the amphora raft, snakes, satyrs, centaur chariot, the tripod contest, and the events that lead to and occur in Olympus (his self-immolation on Mt. Oeta, chariot ride, and adoption by Uni).

The Lion, Birds, Bull, Deer, Horses, Amazon? Kerberos, and Hesperides are illustrated in the 3rd cent. Other stories comprise the Kerkopes, Nessos, amphora raft, snake, satyrs, Gigantomachy, Hypnos/Thanatos, his adoption, and Olympus. Scenes with youths, Epiur, Maris, and victory are frequent.

In the 2nd and 1st cent. representations are rare (226: Birds; 288. 315?: Centaur battles; 321: Syleus adventure).

11. Nemean Lion

The Lion was the most popular Labour (160–192). The thirty-two examples date from the 6th through the 3rd cent. Most were modeled from Greek sources, possibly via S. Italy. The earliest image, from the 3rd quarter of the 6th cent. (162), a mould-made architectural terracotta, depicts H. tackling the beast from behind, seizing it about the neck in a parallel running arrangement that is the same as that on the contemporary Loeb tripod (163, cf. S. Italian terracotta antefix from Capua, 161 of the mid-6th cent., and a later Apulian vase derivation, 160). The composition is found in Argive-Corinthian models (Brommer, Heracles 9). The series of terracottas to which 162 belongs has been attributed to a Caeretan artistic circle (similar examples have been found at Castel d'Asso, Cerveteri, Tuscania, Tarquinia, Rome, Roselle, Veii, and Velletri [392, 399] and have been attributed by Cristofani, in Gli Etruschi, o. c. 30, 194; and Ricciardi, L., in Archeologia nella Toscana. Primo incontro di studio Viterbo [1980] 140-148). The popularity of Hercle iconography on these as well as bronze reliefs seem a result of an aristocratic political program emulating the Peisistratid association with Herakles (cf. Cristofani, o. c. 189-198, esp. 194 ff.; Colonna 3, 442 and n. 84). The Lion labour was also favored in 5th and 4th cent. works, both for public and private consumption - as architectural embellishment, chariot coverings, bronze furnishings, vases, mirrors, jewelry, and gems.

Vulci vase painters (of the Micali Painter circle) adopted a face-to-face confrontation (164, cf. Peloponnesian bronze in Vienna, Langlotz, E., Frühgriechische Bildhauerschulen [1927] no. 41) but a weapon is overlooked. The scheme is found in 5th-3rd cent. gems (165a: club).

Wrestling holds which demanded athletic skill and trickery were promptly adapted from Attic Herakles-Lion skirmishes for late 6th to early 5th cent. Etruscan representations. A closed vertical (166-168), open triangular (169-172), horizontal (182-183), throttling from above or grasping in preparation for a throw over his back (174-181, cf. Szilágyi, o. c. 174, 9-24, who traced the latter scheme to Syracuse and Heraklea coins from the end of the 5th to early 4th cent.), and the throw over his back for a body slam (189-190). The last two were common in the 4th to 3rd cent., although there are 5th cent. gem examples (190, cf. a similar Andokides Painter's throw, ARV<sup>2</sup> 4, 8). H. attacks a Lion downed on the ground on his back (186) in a 4th cent. example. The once vital throw gave way to inactive decorative motifs with the duo on two 4th to 3rd cent. gold rings (192b).

12. Lernaean Hydra

The Hydra fight is found on the facade of Temple B at Pyrgi (203), bf. vases (198-199), bronze cista feet (200) in the last third of the 6th to early 5th cent., and again, on gems of the 5th and 4th cent. (201-202). The terracotta facade columen at Pyrgi may have been created by Caeretan artisans. H. is bearded in Pyrgi terracotta sculpture, a Caeretan hydria, and two of the cista feet with the theme.

On a Pontic vase (198), H. enlists dogs as weapons (instead of a sword and torch in Hes. report: theog. 313 ff.). Vile assists H. on 199 and is pendant in a symmetrical composition on bronze cista feet. H. uses a club (199, 200) and Vile, a sword (200, harpé on 199). The artist omitted the crab, torch, and sickle of Greek examples (cf. Caeretan hydria, Hemelrijk, o. c. 169, 41, no. 23 pl. 88-89, 207; for Attic comparisons, cf. Jurgeit, o. c. 97, 85 n. 66); both are nude on a Paris vase (199). H.'s lack of armor on cista feet may point to their dependence on Attic prototypes (cf. Jurgeit, o. c. 97; Adam 27-28). H. alone fights against the demon in representations of the 5th to 1st cent. - in gems (201-202) and a bronze statuette (206). Of the two gems, on the earlier (201), H. no longer actively engages in combat, holds a knife in hand and has a himation over one shoulder. A later 4th cent. gem (202) revives an altercation in which a club is the favored weapon.

13. Erymanthian Boar

The myth turns up on a bronze tripod(?), a mirror, and gems from the late 6th to late 4th cent. The incident seen on a Vulci tripod of c. 510-500 B.C. (211 = 171) is H. bringing the Boar to Eurystheus and identical to that on a northeastern Peloponnesian appliqué from Delphi (Krauskopf, ThebSag 35 n. 230; Amandry, P., BCH 66/67, 1942/43, 150-156) although a woman standing behind E. was added on the former. A different version, in a more static and compressed mode, is found on a north Etruscan mirror from the end of the 4th cent. (209). There, H.'s foot on the tethered Boar as Menerva watches underscores his victory. But essential elements for identifying the myth are missing on gems of the 5th-4th cent. (207-208) and could represent emblematic sacrifice scenes.

14. Kerynitian Deer

H. and the Deer occur in the late 6th to early 5th cent. on architectural terracottas (222), vases (220), and bronzes (218, 221) and gems from the mid-5th to 3rd cent. (213-217). There are various interpretations of the Portonaccio ridgepole group from Veii (222). H.'s foot is on a tethered Deer; Aplu challenges; Turns and a woman holding a child are present. Questions concerning the group still unresolved include: 1. was the intent mythological or decorative?, 2. does the Deer belong to Aplu or Artumes (Aplu's is unknown in the literary tradition, cf. Apollod. bibl. 2, 5, 3; Colonna 3, 431 and n. 51 bibl.), and 3. who is the woman holding a child? Leto, or Menerva? (Cf. discussions, → Artemis/Artumes 57; Colonna 3, 431-433, 435; Zadoks-Josephus Jitta, o. c. 28, 69-97; Cristofani, M., in Greci e Latini nel Lazio antico. Atti del Convegno della S. I. S. A. C. 1981 (1982) 26-48). The compositional similarity between the Vulci helmet appliqué (221) and the Portonaccio group hints at a common model for the two examples.

A Micali Painter vase representation with the scuffle (220) is closer to Attic models (cf. bf. plate by Lydos of c. 560 B.C., → Herakles 2174); however, the figures are reversed, for Aplu pursues from the left while H. faces his adversary. The Deer, as in the Lydos picture, flees toward Aplu; Artumes is missing from the Etruscan work. The twosome, H. and the Deer are present in an excerpt (218, 217) in minor arts. The arrangement, one knee pressed against the downed animal's haunch while H. grips his horn, is seen in S. Italy and Greece; cf. the Archaic Bull metope from Selinus of c. 550 B.C. and Deer metope from the Athenian Treasury at Delphi, c. 490 B.C., → Herakles 1703; Brommer, Heracles fig. 8, 4th to 3rd cent. gems with the theme (213) adopt the old-fashioned Archaic tandem scheme (cf. Acquarossa architectural terracottas 162, 229). In these, H. generally seizes a horn (213-214, 216-217, 221) and wields a club (213-215, 217a, 221; in one case, a lance, 213e).

15. Stymphalian Birds

No early Stymphalian Birds are known. In a unique 4th cent. specimen (226) H., club in hand, strangles one bird and tramples another. Four 3rd to 1st cent. gems (226-227) follow the story (Apollod. bibl. 2, 5, 6) more closely and adapt the composition of Archaic Attic works (cf. bf. Attic Group E amphora, → Herakles 2241). H., bearded, however, kneels and shoots (two birds: 227; three: 226) with a bow instead of a sling as in the Greek scene.

16. Cretan Bull

The earliest scenes of a man with a bull from c. 580 B.C. to the mid-6th cent. lack the identifying attributes for the myth (230, 231). There is no doubt, however, about the incident on an architectural terracotta from Acquarossa (229) of the 3rd quarter of the 6th cent. H., bearded, grips the Cretan Bull's hoof while holding its horn (he has a quiver; a bow is in the field). The Archaic tandem scheme repeats that for the Lion (162) from the same structure.

In the Perugia Painter's late 5th cent. rendition (228), H. battles the animal with a club while clutching its neck, similar to Attic Thracian Horse conflicts of the 2nd half of the 6th cent. (cf. Hephaisteion metope, → Herakles 1706; Attic bf. Psiax cup, → Herakles 2414). The iconography can also be found on a silver didrachma from Selinus, mid-5th cent. B.C. → Herakles 2316.

17. Horses of Diomedes

H. brought the horses of D. to Eurystheus and consecrated them to Hera (Diod. 4, 15, 4). A single 6th cent. antefix fragment (336) from the decoration of Temple B at Pyrgi with the head of H. and confronting winged horses is not certain as this myth. H. between winged horses as Master of Animals has been reconstructed as a doublet to a similar group with a female, also found at Pyrgi (Uni?) (Hera as Potnia Hippon has been suggested; as for H. identified with the cult of Hera Hippias, cf. Zancani-Montuoro, P., ArchCl 13, 1961, 31 ff.; for Pyrgi, cf. Colonna, o. c. 203, 321; Massa-Pairault, o. c. 77, 10-13, 22-23). Other evidence for worship of H. and Uni has been found at Italic sanctuaries (Bayet 1, 146; Bayet 2, esp. pp. 74-78, 115, 170-173; Comella, A., MEFRA 93, 2, 1981, 717-803; Dury-Moyaers/Renard 188-201; Akten, o. c. 77, passim; Höckmann 1, 67-68; Adam 112-113). See H. with other winged horses below.

During the 5th to 3rd cent. the god is depicted with one (233-235) or two (236-239) horses on objects made for private consumption - on gems, jewelry, and a cista. On one specimen (233), in a image dependent on Greek models, he fights with a club, while seizing the monster by the neck (cf. Attic bf. Psiax cup, → Herakles 2414, c. 510-500 B.C.; the metope on the Hephaisteion, → Herakles 1706). Another gem (234) shows H. over a tiny horse, and two others (235, 239), an inactive image. Action is revived in the bronze group, cista handle (238) from the late 4th to early 3rd cent. showing H. with a pair of horses. The composition is that for the Deer and Bull.

H. is with other winged and unwinged horses on mirrors and one gem of the 5th to 4th cent. On a mirror (332), he rides the horse, Pakste (Pegasos; unwinged) who is named. The connection between the two is unsupported in literary accounts. The scene bears similarity to Bellerophon on Pegasos (although reversed) on an Apulian Darius Painter calyx krater (c. 350 B.C., Schefold/Jung, SB IV 124 fig. 149) and may point to an adaptation from S. Italy and conflation of H. and Bellerophon in the Etruscan mirror. Still, in two others (333, 334), H. tugs at the reins of a winged horse in a composition resembling that of the Olympia Temple Thracian horse metope (→ Herakles 2419). The Etruscan image lacks the altercation (cf. Brommer, Heracles fig. 1; Dunbabin [o. c. 333] proposed → Areion, cf. Hes. sc. 120; according to Argive myth, cf. Paus. 8, 25, 7-10, and Schol. Hom. Il. 23, 346-347, H. had given Areion to Adrastus. There is no indication that Areion had wings, cf. Stat. Theb. 6, 307-309). An inactive stance is on a gem of the same date (335). H. is found with winged horses on an Attic lekythos of c. 490 B.C. (→ Herakles 2416) which Kurtz (JHS 95, 1975, 171-172 nn. 9-12 after Boardman) suggested might be due to another myth, but in Etruscan art the identification of the horses remains inconclusive.

18. Amazons

The Amazon battle was not illustrated in Etruria until the late 4th to early 3rd cent. and then on central Etruscan mirrors (242-244, → Amazones Etruscae 13, 15), cistas, bronze relief handles, and vases (241). This was long after it had disappeared from Attic art in the mid-5th cent. The motif may have been inspired in Etruria by its recent popularity in S. Italy (→ Amazones 778a: five examples of 3rd quarter of the 4th cent.; Schauenburg, K., Philologus 104, 1960, 1-13, suggests that the struggle may have been a later invention prompted by the theme's 4th cent. revival in Epicharmus' comedy, Heracles' Journey to Fetch the Girdle of Hippolyte).

Mirrors present a duel, often with an on-looker (however, cf. → Amazones Etruscae 13: solely H. and an A.). In one case, Vile is present (244, as in Plut. de frat. amor. 492c), and in others, a winged demon (243), Menerva (244), and Elina (Helen). The scene is a quarrel between H. and Hephelenta for her girdle, reported in Apollod. (bibl. 2, 5, 9). Her name is inscribed on two examples (244, → Amazones Etruscae 15; Fischer-Graf 93 n. 861; Matteucig, G., AJA 50, 1946, 63 fig. 2) and from this, the episode can be identified on three others (242. 243, → Amazonas Etruscae 13).

19. Geryon

A krater by a Vulci artist (245), made shortly after the mid-6th cent., presents the only certain Etruscan illustration of the incident. The scheme is close to Greek models. Geryon, however, has two instead of the three bodies of Greek literary and artistic accounts.

20. Kerberos

The story of H. and Kerberos occurs on three vases and eleven gems made between the 3rd quarter of the 6th and 3rd cent. (248–257, cf. Brize, o.c. 277, 28 and n. 207). The earliest images are a late Archaic scarab (250) and vase paintings (255. 256. 257). The episode on gems (248–253) is H.'s attack on the underworld hound, and on bf. S. Italian vases, the victory celebration before Menerva (256–257) – symbolic of H.'s victory over death itself (cf. Schauenburg, K., Philologus 104, 1960, 12; the victory incident resembles Attic [Peisistratid] prototypes, cf. Attic bf. vases, → Herakles 2850. 2852; and a related scene of H. crowned in Olympus on a 5th cent. mirror [408] accompanied by K.).

Earlier gem (249–251) schemes favor rapid action. The beast's three heads (in one case, two heads: 249, in two others, one: 251. 253) derives from E. Greece visual models. A row of curling snakes springs from his spine on an Archaic gem (250) resembling the Hunt Painter's monster on a Laconian cup of c. 560 B. C. (→ Herakles 2605) and that on two Caeretan hydriae (→ Herakles 2616, Hemelrijk, o.c. 169, nos. 4. 11 pls. 32–33. 54–55. Hemelrijk 77, however, suggests that both of the Caeretan vases may have been based on a common Attic model). The opponents bolt from one another violently on a gem (252) in a composition resembling that of the Olympia Bull metope (→ Herakles 2338).

The various schemes with the protagonists used between the 5th and 3rd cent. include: H.'s foot is on K.'s back (248); he rides the beast (249); they walk; H. leads K. (250); he drags the animal (251–252); they wrestle (as in the Lion struggle: 253 vs. 176c), and the duo stand, inactively (on 3rd cent. specimens: 254).

21. Apples of the Hesperides

The Hesperides story in Etruria and S. Italy deals with three mythological contexts:

1. Gems and mirrors (259. 260) treat the episode of H.'s meeting with Atlas/Aril. Of the differing traditions that developed in the 6th cent. (→ Atlas, pp. 3–4. 13–14, and → Herakles, section IV N), a 4th cent. gem (259), may be dependent on one of two: a) in one narrative, H. persuaded Atlas to retrieve the apples while he supported the firmament, and b) in another, he held up the firmament in Atlas' place. In the gem scene (259), H. is alone and staggers under the weight of the heavens with the Hesperides tree at his left. What Eur. reported took place after H. had left the garden. Thus, if it followed this account, the Hesperides tree illustrated on the gem would be impossible. The representation must therefore correspond with Apollod.'s explanation. It seems an excerpt that omitted Atlas and others in more complete Etruscan, Attic and S. Italian prototypes (cf. → Atlas 7. 13. * 15).

2. An alternate version appears on two mirrors and a Messapian vase (261. 263. 264) and is perhaps based on another report (Soph. Trach. 1089–1100; Eur. Herc. 394 ff.) that tells how H. himself took the apples from the Hesperides garden (Paus. 5, 17, 2; 6, 19, 8; 6, 19, 12) with Athena's (263. 264) assistance. The Messapian trozzella (261) incident shows H. alone attacking a tree. No dragon is visible (cf. a parody with a satyr attacking the tree from which wine jugs are suspended, Attic rf. oinochoe, → Herakles 2736, and → Atlas p. 14). Two mirrors (263. 264) from the end of the 5th to after the mid-4th cent. illustrate the event, this time with Menerva. In the first (263), the duo rush away from the garden with the dragon near; and, in the second, they celebrate victory with a sacrifice in the garden. The latter with its goat (sacrifice), altar, and birds may make reference to a chthonic aspect of the Etruscan worship of H. and Menerva (cf. Pfiffig 1, 58. 76–79. 258; Colonna 3, 444–446: chthonic worship of Menerva at an underground altar equipped with a drain for libation at S. Marinella; and Hermansen 154. 158: Menerva and H. as chthonic deities). The Apple-bearing H. bronze votive statuettes beginning c. 400 B. C. from northern and Sabelian (27–29. 54–57, in gems, 34. 35. 53) contexts may have been inspired by this cult function.

3. Two mirrors and a cista (258. 262. 265) may treat the Hesperides victory: once, with Turms (258), again, with Menerva (262), and with Menerva and Vile (265). H. stands before Menerva on a Vulci mirror (262) in a scheme resembling that on the Hephaisteion metope (→ Herakles 2706, Brommer, Heracles fig. 2).

22. Hercle and the expedition to Troy

H.'s rescue of → Hesione from the sea monster, → Ketos (see also below, section 29), is depicted on at least one of several 4th to early 3rd cent. central Etruscan monuments (266–268). Each differs. H. draws a sword (cf. a stone and club in Val. Fl. 2, 451–578, and harpé, Attic bf. cup, Taranto 52. 155, Schefold, SB II 139 fig. 182) to cut off the tongue or hack the insides of Ketos on the obverse of a Volterra vase by the Hesione Painter (266). If H. embracing a nude woman can be interpreted as Hesione (cf. → Herakles 1544 and → Auge 9*. 10* for the typology), the story is continued on the reverse. A similar nude woman and defeated sea monster are together with H. on a 3rd cent. Perugian mirror (267) and probably compressed both scenes in order to stress the victory.

The incident on a late 4th cent. central Etruscan mirror (268) departs from the literary accounts (according to Apollod. bibl. 2 [135–136] 6, 4, H. was aided in the battle at Troy by Telamon. H. killed Laomedon and freed his daughter, Hesione, and Telamon was awarded Hesione as a prize for his assistance). H. shakes Lamtu's (→ Laomedon) (king of Troy) hand at the left while Hesione (inscribed Vilia, daughter of Ilion) is comforted on Echpa's (Hecuba) lap. Hecuba, however, is impossible since she was wife of Priam (who was the son of Lamtu and brother to Hesione), a generation later (cf. discussion in Jucker, I., AntK 29, 1986, 126–136). Perhaps, then, the scheme depends on another explanation (in Diod. 4, 42, 6–7) which held that H. instead of Telamon took Lamtu's daughter as a wife. The motif of H. drawing a nude woman, pulling at a mantle, to him is on three other mirrors (266. 267. 269) (cf. → Auge 16–20, → Herakles LIMC IV pp. 822–823, 1543–1544) and thus, may be intended as the story of H. taking Hesione as his wife.

His cuirass in one case (267) probably corresponds with a report in Tzetz. Lykophr. 34 that H., in full armor, leaped into the sea monster's belly to hew his innards.

Hercle, other principal adversaries

23. Acheloos

The representation in Etruria, in vases, a mirror, gems, jewelry, and small bronzes between the late 6th and 1st half of the 4th cent., utilizes one of three compositions that were employed for Lion combat and other assaults: a) as a wrestling match (271. 272, → Acheloos 229. 236. 239. 240: standing, confronting, triangular Lion combat, cf. 169*. 282: grips animal from above. 230: Olympia Horses metope formula, except H. grips horns); b) in a parallel, tandem, running motif; H. grips A.'s horn(s) (→ Acheloos 238, similar: 233. 273); and c) in a face-to-face fight (270. → Acheloos 234) in a recipe used for the Alkyoneus (274) and Pholos (277) adventures.

A terracotta pinax from the 2nd half of the 5th cent. (272a) from the Portonaccio sanctuary at Veii was made at the same time as small bronze groups (→ Acheloos 139. 140) and displays a wrestling hold in which H. used both hands, similar to that on a 4th cent. mirror (→ Acheloos 230). The two examples may derive from a single model. A. seems to have been worshiped together with H. at Veii (cf. terracotta A. mask from Temple of the Campetti region, Ward-Perkins, J., BSR 29, 1961, 27. 31) and Metaponto (cf. Colonna 3, 437–441 and n. 79: coins).

24. Alkyoneus

The earliest representation of H. and Alkyoneus (274) was created by a Vulci artist working under Peloponnesian influence c. 580–570 B. C. and is one of the earliest of all his myths. Although his attributes are missing in the Etruscan version, the contextual action, grotesque aspect and size of the giant harmonize with literary and later artistic accounts. Its (Peloponnesian) prototype must have been developed near the beginning of the 6th cent. In the nearest comparisons, Sicilian reliefs in Basel (Schmidt, M., in Festschr. F. Brommer [1977] 270–271 pl. 72, 3. 5) and a Caeretan hydria (→ Alkyoneus 31*, Hemelrijk, o.c. 169, no. 21, esp. n. 132) of c. 550 and 520–510 B. C., respectively, H. is nude carrying a club and bow (Pind. I. 6, 31–35: he shot A. with a bow), is accompanied by Hermes, and the action moves toward the right. The direction is the same on the Etruscan krater and the youth accompanying him, is Iolaos (Athena is mentioned in Apollod. bibl. 1, 6, 1; and Hypnos, or Hermes, Brommer, Herakles II 68–69 nn. 13. 14).

Hannestad (The Paris Painter [1974] 47) saw the story on a Pontic vase (→ Alkyoneus 34, with comm. p. 562). The scheme on early 5th cent. works (→ Alkyoneus 32) resembles Attic prototypes (cf. → Alkyoneus 29).

25. Antaios

In an early 5th cent. gem (275), H. throttles the giant from above, in a scheme similar to but earlier than Etruscan Lion skirmishes (174–181). Attic examples with the type are limited to the period from 530–480 B. C. (→ Antaios I 7) and probably provided a model.

26. The Cacus adventure

There is no compelling reason to identify the male figure bound to a tree on a late 6th cent. lebes (276) with Cacus; nearby H. drives cattle. For the Cacus myth and Roman representations → Cacus (see also → Cacu). The story was probably of local origin (Hardie, P. R., Virgil's Aeneid, Cosmos and Imperium (1986) 110 ff.: modeled from the Gigantomachy).

27. Kentauroi

Centauromachies with H. in Etruria seem to be one of two adventures: either that concerning Pholos or → Nessos. For the Pholos adventure → Kentauroi. Etruscan artists depicted two episodes from the incident on late 6th to early 5th cent. ceramics: a) inside the cave, Pholos is beside the pithos, and H. confronts the attacking centaurs (277. 279), and b) H. routs the retreating centaurs while Pholos is missing (278. 282). For the latter, the essential elements of the myth missing still leave doubt as to the story intended.

The earliest Etruscan Pholoe Centauromachy (without Pholos) is by the Amphiaros Painter, c. 540 B. C. (282) – others (283–284) seem excerpts of this composition. The motif appears on several monuments (the frieze at Larisa, the metopes from the Heraion at Foce del Sele, four Pontic, an Orvieto vase, a relief stamped brazier of Caeretan manufacture (279), and two Caeretan Hydriae workshop pieces, Hemelrijk, o.c. 169, no. 25 and alabastron, New York, MMA 1981.11.7, v. Bothmer, D., in Artibus Aegypti: Studia B. v. Bothmer (1983) 18 figs. 13–16). As Isler, H. P., Jdl 98, 1983, 35 n. 76 (and L. Kjellberg, in Larisa am Hermos II [1940] 62. 156, before him) observed, the formula in Etruria may have been derived from E. Greece. In Etruscan art the centaur's form changed from human (278–282. 285–287. 289. 306. 307. 308. 313) to equine forelegs (277. 283. 284. 309. 312. 314. 315) in the later 6th and early 5th cent. – later than in Attic vase painting. Some 5th cent. works, however (inconsistently), continued to exhibit Archaic human forelegs (278. 286–288. 306). A similar inconsistency is found in the transition from equine to human ears and beard to beardlessness.

Of the two Centauromachies, the composition used for Pholos generally differs from that for Nessos in weapons, the number of centaurs, the action, and the direction of the onslaught. For the Pholos combat, H. often used the bow and club (277. 278) (in one case, the club: 282, and, in others, a bow: 279. 284) in close quarters against the centaur(s) onslaught (weapons: branches, uprooted trees [277. 279. 282-286. 288], boulders [278. 287]). Nessos representations are clear from Deianeira's frequent presence (306-310. 315?, sometimes in N.'s arms, 306. 309-310): H.'s weapons are the same as those for the Pholos conflict (306. 310. 314-315; N. rarely uses a weapon: 308, branch. 315, club, branch) but the arrangement differs: both protagonists usually move toward the right and H. attempts to overtake him from behind while N. flees and might turn back (306-307. 309) or plead (309. 313. 314). H. sometimes grips a tuft of N.'s hair (306. 314?).

H. is crowned by a winged, sandaled youth while driving a chariot drawn by game-bag and grape-bearing centaurs on a mid-4th cent. Praenestine mirror (291). The same scheme also appears on Attic bf. and rf. vases (→ Herakles LIMC IV pp. 808, bibl., 810, 1428. 1433; satyrs impersonate H. and Nike on centaur chariot, rf. oinochoe, → Aithiopes 22* = Herakles 1429, Scheffold/Jung, SB IV 171 figs. 207/208). The theme in Etruscan art, however, is unique and the interpretation uncertain. The Dionysiac iconography: an Eros-like winged youth and grape-bearing centaurs hints at a Dionysiac and/or apotheosis reading. There are accounts that after the Gigantomachy, both H. and Dionysos celebrated together (→ Gigantes pp. 192. 195-196 for lit. sources). For H., Dionysos/Fufluns and the thiasos, see 371-375 (cf. Matz, F., in Festschr. C. Weickert (1955) 43 ff.; Dohrn, T., in Helbig III no. 2945, thought the Omphale theme). Cf. H.'s apotheosis in a chariot and crowning (390-391. 405. 407-412. 413a-414).

28. Kerkopes

As he slept under a tree, the two brothers, Kerkopes stole H.'s weapons (→ Kerkops, Kerkopes). Awakening, he captured them and bound them to a pole as animals from the hunt. The theme occurs only on 3rd cent. gems (292) and follows the compressed anecdotal form found two centuries earlier in Greek and S. Italian models (Scheffold, SB II 135; rf. krater, Zancani/Zanotti, Sele II, 195 fig. 46).

29. Ketos

See → Hesione, → Ketos, and section 22, above. H.'s fight against Ketos is illustrated on one side of a Volterra vase (293) and is uncertain on mirrors and a situla (267-269. 398a). The former emulates the menacing Archaic beast in Attic vase painting (cf. bf. cup, Taranto 52.155, Scheffold, SB II 139 fig. 182, c. 540 B.C.), although the Etruscan weapon is a sword instead of a harpe and H. does not grip the Ketos' tongue as described in Greek literary and visual reports. Ketos' visage differs on other works (267. 268, cf. Corinthian krater, Boston 63.420, Scheffold, SB II

30. Kyknos

→ Kyknos I. Two incidents from the story appear on Etruscan monuments: a) the melee, and b) the killing of K. The first, found on a Pontic vase of c. 525 B.C. (294), depicts H. assailing from the r. (rare), pursuing a fleeing K. while Laran (presumably) stands at the l. The two also battle face-to-face (296. 301-303); in some (295. 298-300), K. has fallen but is not yet dead. H. is often dressed as a hoplite (294. 296. 303) (as reported in Hes. sc. 122-138), strikes with a sword (303), lance (294), club and bow (295. 297. 301. 302), or club (296. 298-300), and is beardless. K. (bearded) and Laran are armed with helmet, shield, and sword.

The fight on a bronze chariot relief from Castle San Mariano (301) of c. 500 B.C. and a Leningrad vase (297) dated c. 480 B.C. confirm the literary accounts (in Apollod. bibl. 2 [114] 5, 10 and Hyg. fab. 31. 3) that Zeus cast his thunderbolt between Ares and H. On the monuments, they appear between the foes (cf. Hes. sc. 383-385 and Attic vases, Höckmann I, 115. n. 592 for discussion). The bf. vase (297), a helmet appliqué (303), and gems (298-300) of the 5th through 4th cent., are reduced to the two protagonists in an excerpt of the scene. On the latter the enemies are usually nude but K.'s helmet and shield, or lance distinguishes him from H.

31. Nereids

On the way to the Hesperides, H. encountered Nereus. He wrestled with the old man of the sea in order to find the way while his daughters fled or looked on (cf. Brize, o.c. 277. 97-99). The Malacena vase illustrates H. flanked by the Nereids riding hippocamps (304) and lacks Nereus. The compositional symmetry indicates a decorative rather than narrative function. Flanking H., the N. bear the weapons of Achilles (→ Achilleus pp. 122-128).

32. Nereus

The sea monster was a symbol of immortality and the way to afterlife; H. wrestled with Nereus on his way to the Hesperides. N. would not give up the prize but mutated into water and fire as H. attempted to capture him (for lit. sources → Nereus). On a 6th cent. gem, one of the earliest in Etruria (305), H., face-to-face with the old man grasps his l. hand with his r. H. extends his l. hand behind the man who raises his r. hand (in greeting?, fending him off?). A woman behind the man holds up a flower. Menerva, behind H., holds a spear in her l. and raises her r. hand, index finger extended. The narrative has no comparison and is unclear. According to Beazley (o.c. 176a, 31-33), «from the attitude of (the man) ... the encounter is not amicable ...». His receding hair and H.'s grasping his l. hand suggests the old man of the sea, Nereus, resembling the full human form of Attic bf. vases, from c. 560 B.C. on (cf. discussion and list in Glynn, R., AJA 85, 1981, 125-126 nos. 7-9. 14-20; bf. oinochoe, → Nessos. There are four Etruscan works illustrating the encounter between H. and Nessos with Deianeira (306-310) beginning in the 2nd half of the 6th cent. The scheme, H. pursuing a fleeing Nessos, who turns back toward his protagonist, follows Attic examples of c. 550 B.C. (cf. bf. hydria, Louvre E 803, Scheffold, SB II 148 fig. 196). Deianeira appears in one of two ways: a) carried by N., or b) running toward her rescuer (307? 308). She pleads for rescue (306. 309) in a gesture also used in Caeretan hydriae (Hemelrijk, o.c. 169, nos. 16. 17. 20) and assumed for Nessos on both Etruscan (313. 314) and a Caeretan hydria (ibid.). Her father, Oineus, is omitted in the Pontic and Micali Painter examples (cf. his appearance in Caeretan hydriae).

33. Nessos

The scene of a satyr and maenads on the reverse with H. and N. on a 4th cent. Faliscan krater (310) suggests influence from S. Italian (cf. Lucanian rf. nestorides, Paris, Louvre K 537, LCS no. 960 pl. 75, 2-3. mid-4th cent.: Trendall thought of a connection with the satyr play).

H.'s hair-pulling (306. 314?) was perhaps derived from Attic or E. Greek models of the theme (cf. on a 7th cent. proto-Attic Nettos amphora, Fittschen, Sagendarstellungen 118 SB 24 and Caeretan hydria, Hemelrijk, o.c. 169, no. 7).

Contrary to most literary accounts that report his using a bow and arrow (cf. however, Bacchyl. frg. 64. 25-31 Snell/Maehler in which he used a club), he is usually seen with a club (306-307. 310. 314) as in Attic examples, or both a club and bow (308) or a sword (309). N. defends himself with a branch in one specimen (308) reminiscent of the metope at the Heraion at Foce del Sele and Attic scenes.

34. Prumathe

The theme of H. rescuing Prumathe (→ Prometheus) from his terrible fate is found on Etruscan mirrors, once with Aplu (317), with Castor (316), and with Esplace/Asklepios and Menerva (318) as companions. P. is the central figure in all three compositions and still captive in one (317). An eagle is below in two scenes (316. 318). In one, H. is called by the epithet, Calanice (316) (Etruscanized Kallinikos; for recent discussion of its use in Vulci between the 6th and 4th cent., cf. Martelli, M., StEtr 54, 1986 [1988] 165-170). The architectural setting with Menerva and Esplace on the Kranzspiegelgruppe mirror (318) suggests Olympus as the setting (cf. Scheffold, SB III 89 n. 190). The motif, Prumathe flanked by rescuers and bystanders, stems from Attic art of the 2nd half of the 6th cent. (Scheffold, SB II 52-53 fig. 57).

The connection between H. and Esplace/Asklepios (318) was known in Greece (cf. Robert, Heldensage 520 n. 4; Paus. 3, 14, 6-7; for possible introduction of Asklepios into Etruria in the 5th cent., → Esplace with bibl.).

35. Skylla

The only reference to H. fighting Skylla is Lykophr. 44-49. 651 and Tzetz. Lykophr. 45. Still, a S. Italian saga might have existed which Stesich. in his Geryoneis or Skylla could have mentioned. The combat might concern H.'s victory over Death, his journey into afterlife, his role as protector against sea danger, or as snake-slayer. Boosen (o.c. 319, 60-62) compared the beast to Charun, Vanth or Tuchulcha and suggested its reference to sea danger (cf. Ridgway, B. S., JRA 2, 1979, 174-175).

The theme is displayed on an early 1st cent. bronze candelabrum finial (319). A model for the Skylla image appears on 2nd cent. Etruscan sarcophagi (cf. Boosen, o.c. 319, pls. 6, 8; 7, 9-10: some are winged, carrying a boulder or rudder; Ridgway, o.c. 172-175).

36. Strymon

In Thrace, H. brought the cattle of Geryon to Hera but encountered the river Strymon which he filled with stones (Apollod. bibl. 2 [112] 5, 10, 12). There is no certainty that Etruscan gems of the 4th cent., showing H. lifting a massive boulder is this episode (320).

37. Syleus adventure

Euripides composed a satyr play (Syleus, TGF<sup>2</sup> frg. 687-694) about the incident. The walking, bearded, long-haired man, shouldering a double axe, and holding a vine on a 2nd cent. gem (321) is uncertain as H. in the story. His identification hinges on whether or not the slender wrap is a lionskin. On this as well as Greek representations (the hero is in at least one of the six Greek vases thought by Brommer, JdI 59/60, 1944/45, 69-78, and Scheffold/Jung, SB IV 204-207 figs. 251/252 n. 531, to illustrate the theme [opposed: Zazoff, EtrSk 114 and n. 31]), the figure carries a double axe. On a second example (321a) a beardless man may hold a vine branch with a fruit (grapes?) tree behind him.

38. Triton

H. with the Triton (for his iconography → Triton) are perhaps represented on five Etruscan works (322-326) made between the 2nd half of the 6th and 4th cent. The combat duo run in the same direction in two cases (322. 324), and, in one (323), the pursuit encircles the vessel. One late 6th cent. artist (325) adopted the triangular arrangement from Lion wrestling scenes. A late 5th to early 4th cent. gem (326) presents H. in repose and perhaps the tiny crumpled creature below is Triton.

Hercle in other encounters

39. With a Minotaur

On two vases (328-329), in which H. instead of Theseus has an altercation with a bull-headed beast, Schauenburg (JdI 85, 1970, 33 ff.) proposed a conflation of the two myths, H. and the Cretan Bull and Theseus and the Minotaur. In another instance (330), H. is in a divine gathering together with Minos, Menerva and Vile. Rather than a local (lost) Etruscan legend, all are perhaps the result of the artist's imperfect knowledge of the stories.

40. With Mlacuch

Neither the woman named Mlacuch nor the theme of H. carrying her, illustrated on an early 5th cent. Vulci mirror (331) have supporting testimony. Most recently, Colonna (o.c. 39, 20-21) proposed Mlacuch as Dea Bona at Orvieto (cf. also Delatte, A., in Vol. offert à J. Capart [1935] 124 n. 3; for Mlacuch see also Bayet 1, 199-217). The scheme was derived from Magna Graecia or Greece (cf. Eretria group of Theseus and Antiope: De Grummond, N., A Guide to Etruscan Mirrors [1982] 118, 145-146 with bibl.) and was also employed for Epiur (157) on another 5th cent. Vulci mirror as well as an episode with a woman named Turan on a 4th cent. gem (360).

41. With the amphora raft

From the beginning of the 5th to the 3rd cent. H. is portrayed on a raft made from amphorae (337-340; and once together with a Silen, on 341) on mirrors and gems. He is a youth and the amphora raft has a lionskin sail on two mirror exergues (337, bow and club; 338, club). No ancient account explains the incident. Gerhard (EtrSp IV p. 51 ff.) saw in it the drunken H., fetching more wine; Furtwängler (AG III 197), his transporting holy water as patron of springs; Beazley (o.c. 176a, 39), his journey to the West (Pind. N. 3, 20-26); Stiglitz (116-122, 130-131), and Pfiffig (1, 343-344), the influence of Italic mystery cults and the theme of afterlife and eternal youth; Zazoff (EtrSk 123-124), a H.-Silen cult of water. Perhaps a Hellenistic report (in Serv. Aen. 7, 662; 8, 299) in which on his return journey through Italy, H. is described as having taken a ship using the lionskin as a sail explains the scenes.

H.'s loading (350) and leaving (349) a ship may stem from the same theme.

42. With snake(s)

H. fought serpents as a child, in the Hydra episode, and Ladon in the Hesperides adventure. An altercation between H. (club) and an anonymous snake is displayed on gems and bronzes (342-345) from the 2nd half of the 5th to the 3rd cent. Brommer (Herakles II 32) thought the theme unlikely to be his killing the snake at the river Sagaris while serving Omphale in Lydia in Hyg. (astr. 2, 14, 2), as its illustration is in Italic art and appears on lamps and coins as well, cf. Zazoff, EtrSk 23. S. Woodford (→ Herakles, LIMC IV p. 831-832) correctly saw it as emblematic.

43. With a rabbit monster

H.'s attacking a gigantic, human-bodied, winged, rabbit monster on a gold ring (348) has no satisfactory interpretation. J. Boardman (AntK 10, 1967, 23) noted its resemblance to E. Greek creatures. Perhaps it communicated H.'s role as a god-hunter par excellence (cf. Burkert, W., Structure and History in Greek Mythology and Ritual [1979] 94 ff.).

Hercle's later life, death and apotheosis

44. With Hypnos/Thanatos

An unidentified winged male demon appears behind a seated bent H. on early 4th to 3rd cent. gems (386). There are no direct parallels in Greek art and the inscription, Tievta, on one example cannot be interpreted. Furtwängler found the theme «inexplicable»; Richter (EngrGemsGE 199) suggested a legend (cf. Verg. Aen. 5, 854-856 and Sil. 10, 356, where Hypnos used a twig dipped in a liquid to induce sleep) in which H. was put to sleep before his apotheosis; Zazoff (EtrSk 96 n. 145) compared the demon with a similar winged male that led or spoke with the deceased illustrated on a funerary stele of ca. 400 B.C. but concluded, it could not be Hypnos.

Hypnos is not represented in Etruscan art. H., moreover, is seen on his pyre in the same (exhausted) attitude (387). Owing to its similarity, Richter, o.c. 386, (and Brommer, Herakles II 115) thought the demon could perhaps be Thanatos. The question remains unresolved.

45. On Oeta

H. is depicted at his demise on a funeral pyre on Mt. Oeta (387) on a late 5th cent. gem and perhaps a North Etruscan late 4th cent. mirror (388). Bent wearily, a young H. sits on a pyre that has started to burn at its lowest course (cf. Boardman, J., in Festschr. K. Schauenburg [1986] 127-132 for the iconography of the pyre before 460 B.C.). Brommer, Herakles II 93-95, thought it might have originated in a (lost) satyr play; Hermansen (o.c. 388, 147 ff.) theorized that it illustrates the reincarnation of a H.-Maris god.

46. Journey to Olympus and introduction to Tinia and/or with other deities

The story of H.'s apotheosis was divided by Brommer (Herakles II 96-97) into: 1. the preparation for departure with a quadriga; 2. the departure itself; 3. the arrival in Olympus; and 4. the stay there. To this, Etruscan and S. Italian artists added 5. his adoption by Uni (400-404), and 6. his crowning by winged and unwinged creatures.

a) His departure with Menerva in a chariot could be conjectured on a Velletri architectural terracotta relief (399) of the 3rd quarter of the 6th cent. based upon their frequent appearance together (cf. 131, 132) and Greek prototypes of the two before a gathering of deities, however, lacks essential attributes to identify the two. A myth is indicated by the winged horses pulling the biga. Later representations dependent on Greek and S. Italian models are secure: a Faliscan calyx krater and silvered phialai (390-391) made between the late 5th and 2nd half of the 4th cent. The latter were inspired by Tarentine prototypes (cf. Schefold/Jung, SB IV 224-225 nn. 579-580).

A unique scene of two draped women (one winged) raising H. on a 4th cent. gem (389) may illustrate another (local) version of his apotheosis. Perhaps the women derive from the two nymphs who at the funeral pyre douse the flames on Attic and a Faliscan vase (Attic rf.; → Herakles 2916, 2917, Brommer, Herakles II figs. 46-47; and Faliscan rf., EVP 103; Deppert, o.c. 104, 69 no. 1 pl. 54c. d.).

b) His arrival and introduction in Olympus may be among the earliest of the apotheosis series portrayed in Etruria (as in Greek art, cf. Brommer, Herakles II 95-98). In another illustration from Velletri (399) that resembles the theme in Greek examples, H. and Menerva (lacking attributes) may stand before seated deities on Olympus (Colonna 2 and 3 proposed the theme for the statue groups of H. and Menerva found at the Portonaccio sanctuary, 132, and Sant' Omo-bono, 131).

The same subject could be intended on a 6th cent. bronze chariot relief (393) as well as 4th and 2nd cent. vases and mirrors (394-397). Tinia and H. stand face-to-face at close range in an apparent introduction on the former (cf. Höckmann 1, 56-57). A mirror (394) may also recount the motif, derived from a scheme on Attic vases (cf. rf. bell krater, near the Talos Painter, of c. 400 B.C., → Herakles 2870). Both H. and Tinia are wreathed (and Juno diademed) as in Attic vases, although other essentials (H. embracing a nude woman, costumes, and furnishings) differ. The topic is less certain on a 4th cent. Praeneste mirror (395) showing Iuno, Iovei and Hercle. The deities names are inscribed in Latin and Tinia sits on an altar beside which are models of a uterus and phallus. Peter (2260) suggested H. and Iuno as male and female deities of matrimony. For Pfiffig 1, 344, it represented the reconciliation of the two former foes in Olympus; he connected it with H.'s adoption (400-404) (cf. Richter, MetMusBronzes 286 and de Grummond, AntK 25, 1982, n. 24 for a discussion of the setting). His appearance as an adolescent on another Praeneste mirror (396) with Uni and a woman suggests possible references to themes of youth, immortality, and adoption.

47. Adoption, suckled by Uni

An adoption story is reported in Diod. (4, 39, 2-3) and is demonstrated on 5th to 3rd cent. vases and mirrors (400-404). Diod. related that after H. had arrived in Olympus, Zeus persuaded Hera to adopt him as her son. On a 5th cent. mirror (402) H. is young and later, an adult (403-404: 3rd cent.) either bearded or clean-shaven. An inscribed Volterra mirror of c. 300 B.C. (404, «This shows how the mortal Hercle became the legitimate son of Uni») shows an adult H. nursed by Uni in what seems a ritual reenactment of the reported adoption, confirming Diod.'s account. There is a close correspondence between the adolescent H. nursed by Uni and Eros nursed by Aphrodite on a Faliscan (401) and Apulian vase (from Taranto, c. 380 B.C., Schefold, SB III 198 fig. 270), respectively. Bystanders may differ and include winged and unwinged women (402) a youth(s) (400-402a), Turan, Mean, Tinia and Menerva (403), or Tinia, Aplu, and other deities (404).

48. Crowned / with women on Olympus

Between the 5th and 3rd cent., H. is illustrated crowned or wreathed by an unwinged woman (405.

407). There is no indication that she is Hebe. Other anonymous winged women may hold a wreath, a flower bud, a sash or serve him on Faliscan wares, mirrors and silvered phialae (411-416). In some, the god rests near Minerva, or other companions such as Tinia, Vile, Leinth, or possibly Turan. The inscribed name, Mean identifies a half or fully nude woman (408: un-winged. 409, 410: winged) about whom we know little else (cf. Martelli, o.c. 176f, 166). On one mirror (413a) in which a half-nude winged woman crowns a youthful H. who stands before an enthroned Tinia, his victory celebration on Olympus is clearly demonstrated. Thus, in Etruria, anonymous female demons and Mean appear to have replaced the S. Italian Nike figure in apotheosis compositions (cf. Schauenburg, K, Gymnasium 70, 1963, 119-120, 122-123 pl. 6, 1-2; → Herakles, LIMC IV 1535* and p. 824: Nike or Athena).

H. Herakles Ogmios

27. Celtic painting. Lucian Hercules has a Greek describing a Celtic painting, perhaps seen in Massilia. H. is old, bald, with white hair behind, rugged sunburnt skin, lionskin and club in r. hand, quiver on back, bow in l. hand. H. leads an admiring group of men who are bound to him by chains of gold and amber which pass through their ears and are fastened to H.'s tongue. This was explained by the fact that the Celts regarded H., not Hermes, as the patron of the arts of speech, perfection in which comes with old age, and believed that, as a wise man, he accomplished his deeds through persuasion: his arrows are mordant, swift words that wound the soul ...

Dress and non-athletic physique make him unlike H. (Hedan/Vernhet).

VII. False identifications

88. Clay mould. From Corbridge (Corstopitum). – Ross 379 pl. 65a. – Late 2nd cent. A.D. – Helmeted man with oval shield and crude club; at the side a wheel. Confusion between club and the thunderbolt of Taranis; cf. Duval 155, 165 no. 51.

89. Clay relief bowls. Banassac D 37 (style of Mercator and Natalis). – Oswald, Index no. 754 pl. 36; Hedan/Vernhet 298 no. 4 fig. 39. – Domitianic. – Naked man on pedestal holding club (?) and another large object. A fisherman (Hedan/Vernhet, since Germanus uses this motif in fishing scenes)?

PUNIC WORLD AND AFRICA

H. had been assimilated to Melkart in Phoenicia and his worship was widespread in the Punic west. This did not impose a different iconographic pattern from the Greek or Roman for H./Melkart because the Phoenician god was basically represented by aniconic symbols, and later by an irregular iconography. The figure appears commonly on green «jasper» (and sometimes cornelian) scarabs in the Punic world. These may have been made in the west, though this remains uncertain, and the types are common to different centres: notably, Carthage itself, Ibiza and Sardinia. The principal types have been listed already under →Herakles – 4 (head); 19. 21. 22 (striking); 41. 43. 46 (kneeling). There are also action scenes in this series: →Herakles 1859. 1885. 1903 (with lion); 2250? (with birds); 2814. 2815 (fights a man); 2825 (fights a snake).

In the later period other exploits may have been attributed to the hero; thus, it has been suggested that the fight with a griffin on the Leptis pilaster (45) may be an exploit of a Phoenician god since the beast was a common opponent of heroes and gods in the east. This might then allude to H.'s fight with monsters of the Libyan desert alluded to by some authors but variously located.

There are some portrait assimilations to H. not listed above. Silver Hispano-Carthaginian coins (of Cartagonova?) have a male bust with club and may show Hamilcar Barca and Hannibal (beardless): 236–206 B.C. For these see Vives y Escudero, A., La Moneda Hispanica (1924) I 37 ff.; Robinson, E. S. G., «Punic coins of Spain», in Essays in Roman Coinage (1956) 39 ff. 50 pl. 2, 6b; Richter, Portraits fig. 2018; Villaronga, L., Las monedas hispanocartaginesas (1973) 145 ff. class III (with discussion and bibl.); Blazquez 32–41 pl. 7bis.

Sallust (Iug. 89, 4) records that the court of Juba regarded Numidian H. as assimilated to Melkart. Juba II believed himself a descendant of Sophax, son of H. and Tingē (formerly Antaios' wife). His coins show him with lionskin and club, and the reverses a lion, temple, skyphos or other symbol of H. In this he follows the Hellenistic tradition begun by Alexander. For the coins see Mazard, CNNM 139. 145. 149. 150. 166. 169. 176. 177.

Rather different is the «H. of Massicault» in Tunis (Bardo Mus.), the realistic funerary marble portrait of an elderly man, holding corn and poppies, with his dog, wearing a lionskin and probably holding a club (De Carthage à Kairouan. Cat. exp. Paris, Petit Palais [1982/83] 123 no. 174). He seems assimilated to the virtuous and suffering hero, and an Eleusinian initiate like H. (whence the corn and poppies; mystery cults were popular in 3rd cent. A.D. Africa) who might thereby, like the hero, overcome the power of Hades.

Funeral stelae (32. 85) of the late 2nd cent. A.D. place H. scene in areas usually reserved for gods of the underworld or scenes of sacrifice. These show the continuity of the cult of H. as an underworld hero in

N. Africa, and his association with Tanit and Caelestis, other indigenous deities who appear on the stelae.

H. appears in a Bacchic context in many N. African mosaics and other monuments which are listed in the main H. article and are in a metropolitan style.

The possibility of H. as an indigenous African deity has been proposed (Corbier, P., DHA 1, 1974, 95–109) but without iconographic support, and based on an inscription invoking H. as genius of the Saburienses, not far from Hippo Regius.

HISPANIA

The principal cult was at the Melkart sanctuary at Gades (Cadiz), founded in the early years of the city, with buildings and ritual of Phoenician type. There was no Melkart or H. image but in the Hellenistic period, under Carthaginian influence, the iconography of H. is introduced and a Tyrian-Greek duality can be perceived in the Herakleion of Gades, with altar, images and exploits of H. depicted (→Herakles 1751; described by Sil. Pun. 3, 32–44).

Trajanic and Hadrianic coins of Rome refer to H. Gaditanus (→Herakles 480) showing the hero with club and lionskin in the Greco-Roman manner and hinting at Gades only in the figure of reclining Okeanos and two Hesperids (?) (→Herakles 3415). A portico discloses the cult image. Both emperors were born in Spain (Baetica). H. Gaditanus is also suggested on the Beneventum arch where he is shown with dog, olive tree and horse (but see Hassel, F. J., Der Trajansbogen in Benevent [1966] 12 n. 71 pl. 6, 2); and on a denarius of Postumus (A.D. 259–268) inscribed HERCULI GADITANO he is shown fighting Geryon (Bastien, P., RNum 1958, 77 nos. 45–46 pls. 6–7). H. as priest of H. Gaditanus is shown in a relief from Tivoli (→Herakles 872a).

The Hamilcar Barca and Hannibal portraits with H. attributes on Spanish coins (see last section) reflect the importance of the H. cult in Spain and the oriental practice of veneration of rulers spread by the Hellenistic kings; but there has been long argument about whether these are truly portraits (Villaronga o. c.).

The striking H. statuettes (19. 20) differ considerably from the Roman pattern as seen in south Gaul. 19 seems a primitive Iberian version of the eastern «smiting god», once Reshef or Baal-Melkart (Almagro-Basch, M., Trabajos de Prehistoria 37, 1980, 283), invested with the Greek hero's pose and attributes and spread to the west with various local interpretations. 20 is markedly schematic and although the hanging lionskin suggests Italic inspiration the style is closer to that of late Iberian toreutic.

The Murcia marble (2) may be a late derivative from the Hermerakles type studied by J. Schwartz (ASAE 45, 1947, 37–49) known in an impression from Hermoupolis where the figure holds a cornucopia (→Herakles 926a); here, it seems he holds an apple. The type was derived in Egypt from Syrian sources, according to Schwartz, and has funerary associations. The Dodekathlos also appears on a series of picked stone reliefs from Italica (→Herakles 1748).

GALLIA

H. figures of the 4th/3rd cent. B.C. (7. 13. 14) resemble the Italic. 13 has a characteristic head with flat crown, large nose and no ears, non-Italic features that may indicate Celtic influence beyond the Alps. The coin 62 also has Celtic traits. H. stands before a statue in a classical group but Blanchet points to the relationship of H. with thermal waters of the Segusiavi area where the coin was struck. The Deneuvre altars, statues and stelae (16) relate to the therapeutic mineral waters of the locality, as does the statue from the La Vacherie fountain (17). Here he wears a torque which according to Hatt (o. c. 102) was reserved for infernal gods in Gaul. Duval (o. c. 85) holds that H. was invoked in Glanum as curator and elsewhere (Dacia and Italy) he appears associated with thermal springs, an indication of the general belief that such places led from the underworld (Bayet 82 ff.). Cf. →Herakles 1322–1328 and →Herakles/Hercle 81–97. M. Dayet (RA 1963, 167–178) analyses votive statuettes from Aix-les-Bains, relating them to other finds and inscriptions naming H. (Herculi Genio loci Fontibus calidis, CIL III 1566), inferring assimilation to the Celtic god Borvo although this god was generally associated with Apollo.

The links with Smertios, usually shown attacking a snake with a club, and with Ogmios are stronger. Lucian's description of the latter (27) does not match any representation but the bald (29) and elderly (28) might recall H. Ogmios (following Reinach).

Various monuments show H.'s acceptance into the Celtic pantheon, as in the sculptural group with Gallic gods (56) and on altars (57. 58) where he is shown with Nehalennia and Neptune, the former a goddess of good fortune, invoked for sea voyages. In a different category are the Viergeöttersteine and the reliefs decorating the pillars of «Juppiter columns», columns supporting a riding god attacking an anguiped. They appear in the Rennes area in association with Roman camps. Other deities on the bases are usually Mercury, Juno and Minerva (see Bauchhenß/Noelke). The column derives from Roman practice but the Gauls crowned it with a figure of a god, similar to Roman Juppiter. 73–81 have been chosen to show the variety of H.'s attributes. The raven on his shoulder (81) alludes (Hatt 95) to his divinatory function for the Celts. Earliest is the Mainz column (70) and most of the stones are 2nd cent. A.D. Relief slabs from Chiragan (→Herakles 1749) show the cycle of H.'s labours.

The terra sigillata figures, especially from La Graufesenque workshops of the potters Germanus and Crucuro, are varied. Most are of the 2nd half of the 2nd cent. and the degree of their originality and sources of inspiration has still to be properly explored (Hedan/Vernhet 301). On 15 H. walks with club raised before him and preparing to throw a stone, a variant on the commoner walking posture with club on shoulder (24). Other isolated figures present problems of interpretation. Déchelette (p. 75) was puzzled by the piece from Lezoux (38) where H. seems to hold a gorgon head and speculates whether Minerva could at any time have given her protégé H. the Medusa head as protection. It is more probably the female head of the Hydra, the immortal head that H. severed and buried. This seems confirmed by the medallion (37) where the Hydra has a female head. On another Lezoux figure (42) Déchelette sees on the head of the Hesperides snake horns, as on a snake in Gallic myth (Duval 17. 38-39). The contamination is greater on the Vignory stela (85) if this is H. and not a Celtic god: the trousers, tunic and sheep-headed snake are far from the classical. On 47 H. fights an unrecognisable animal in a scheme resembling his fight with the hind; 48 is comparably confusing and it is not clear whether H. is thought to be dealing with → Cacus or → Kyknos (I), or even Diomedes as he is shown on some Roman sarcophagi. Lack of attributes on 86 makes it difficult to be certain whether this is H. carrying off a woman, and on 87 the long figure may not be H., despite the club and apple. The potter Crucuro made various circus scenes (82) where a figure, half-gliadiator, half-hero, fights Heraklean animal adversaries. The identification is helped by the inscriptions but the equipment is that of the circus arena. The more elaborate applique 61 has the final scene of the encounter with Kyknos, with H. and Mars before Juppiter.

The Avignon frieze (33) with two H. episodes combines bare torso with long tunic, a provincial interpretation of the exploits from an artistic milieu only just awakening to the new manners of late imperial art.

BRITANNIA

On coinage we see H. or the local god assimilated to him with club on shoulder (21), a type not derived from Roman coins, though the Epaticcus and Caratacus from (1) more closely resemble classical models. The Cerne Abbas giant (11) is included for his attributes (club and traces of lionskin?). Piggott associates this with a possible H. sanctuary in the hills. The ithyphallic figure, basically an apotropaic symbol, emphasises either his fecundity or lust, well attested in myth.

The reliefs 4. 5 present his Celtic aspect, stressing his physical strength, wearing torques, while the bronze 12 may be imported from Gaul and intended for a military sanctuary. The child H. on the Welsh pool handle (30) offers an unusual version of the fight with the snakes: the figure is not a baby and already wears the lionskin. Reliefs have him with Hesione and Mithras (44. 49). An H. with grotesquely large head appears on the Whitley Castle relief (35) and with the Hydra and Hesione again on Castor ware (36. 43). 88 has been falsely taken for H. because of the club but the wheel shows that this is not the Greek hero.

For H. in British cult see Green, H. J. M. in Pagan Gods and Shrines of the Roman Empire (edd. Henig, M./King, A., 1986) 44-45.

GERMANIA

The presence of H. on Mithraic reliefs in Germania and Gaul (50) poses unresolved questions. He appears with other Roman gods (50. 51. 52). They are associated with Roman military presence, as were the Viergöttersteine. Of these examples are chosen for different poses or attributes (65-72).

The clumsy figure on the tile from Aguntum (3) displays the H. domesticus function better by its inscription than its action. The lion fight on the Gundestrup cauldron (84) recalls the iconography of H. and the lion, and if there are any classical motifs on the vessel (pace Hatt) could reflect the classical story.

HERECURA

Unterweltsgöttin, vor allem des Decumatlandes, deren Name in mehreren Varianten, darunter auch → Aeracura, erscheint (zu den Namensformen s. u.). H. wird in der antiken Literatur nicht erwähnt, so sind Inschriften und Darstellungen zusammen mit archäologischen Befunden die einzigen Quellen für die Göttin.

EPIGRAPHISCHE QUELLEN: Während sich in Obergermanien der Bestand an Inschriften und Bildwerken in den letzten Jahrzehnten noch vermehrt hat, bedürfen einige Zuschreibungen von Inschriften an H. der Überprüfung, weshalb hier eine neue Liste gegeben werden soll, gegliedert nach Provinzen des Reiches:

GERMANIA SUPERIOR: CIL XIII 6438 (1); 6439 (2); AEpigr 1931 Nr. 67 (Stuttgart-Bad Cannstatt). - CIL XIII 6359; 6360; 6363 (Rottenburg). - CIL XIII 6631a (Stockstadt). - CIL XIII 11695a (Freinsheim). - AEpigr 1956 Nr. 89 (Mainz). - CIL XIII 6322 (4; Sulzbach).

GALLIA LUGDUNENSIS: CIL XIII 2539 (= Allmer, A., Inscr. de Vienne 385 Nr. 698) (Belley).

VENETIA: CIL V 725 (Aquilaia).

PANNONIA SUPERIOR: CIL III 4395 u. 11087; AEpigr 1929 Nr. 228 (= Egger, R., Der röm. Limes in Österreich 16, 1926, 135-156 Nr. 72) (Carnuntum).

AFRICA PROCONSULARIS: Inscr. Lat. Algérie II 4646 (= CIL VIII 5524); 4647 (Thibilis).

Ausscheiden müssen folgende Inschriften: Allmer, A., Inscr. de Vienne Nr. 385; CIL V 8126; 8200; 8970a (nicht beweisbar, daß Hera, Era oder Haera Domina mit H. identisch! Einer Unterweltsgöttin wird man sicher auch nicht pro salute et reditu [so CIL V 8200] eine Weihung darbringen); CIL VIII 6962 (wieder herangezogen von Morano-Rodriguez; Aerucina in Zeile 10 meint Venus Aerucina).

Wie bei anderen keltischen oder germanischen Göttern schwankt die Namensform H.s beinahe von Inschrift zu Inschrift: Aeracura (CIL VI 142); Aerocura (CIL V 725; VIII 5524; XIII 2539); Aerocura (CIL XIII 6322); Eracura (AEpigr 1950 Nr. 112); Eraecura (CIL XIII 6631a; Inscr. Lat. Algérie II 4647); Erecura (CIL XIII 6363; AEpigr 1931 Nr. 67); [Ha]erocura (AEpigr 1956 Nr. 89); Herecura (CIL XIII 6359; 6438; 6348[?]; 11695a[?]); Herecura (CIL XIII 6360); Vera-cura (AEpigr 1929 Nr. 228).

Ebenso vielfältig wie die Namensformen sind die Versuche, den Namen H. etymologisch zu erklären, wobei bisher noch nicht einmal Einigkeit darüber besteht, aus welcher Sprache der Name stammen könne: Aeracura von lat. aera curans, «Geldschafferin» (Mommmsen); Hericuris, verwandt mit deutsch «Harke», «Herke», also germanisch (Becker, J., BonnJbb 42, 1867, 111-115; zu «Harke» vgl. Grimm, J., Deutsche Mythologie I<sup>4</sup> [1875 = 1968] 210); Hera-cura von Ἥρα κούρη (Gaidoz) oder von Ἥρα κούρη (Sext bei Haug/Sixt; Riese; Morano-Rodriguez); Aeracura venetisch (Conway/Watmough/Johnson; Radke). Von diesen Ableitungen fand in jüngerer Zeit vor allem die von Gaidoz weitere Beachtung. Sie scheitert daran, daß die als Ursprung vermutete Form Ἥρα κούρη in den griechischen Inschriften nicht nachweisbar ist, sondern höchstens Κούρη Ἥρα. Κούρη, -α scheint bei Götternamen immer dem Namen voranzugehen (vgl. Gaidoz 205; vgl. auch AEpigr 1940 Nr. 30 und Danov, Ch. M., BullInstArchBulg 11, 1937, 198-199). Die Herleitung von Ἥρα κούρη wurde jüngst von Morano-Rodriguez wieder aufgenommen, allerdings mit völlig in die Irre gehender Begründung. H. muß in Thibilis als Namensbestandteil der Terra Mater Magna Idaea aufgefaßt werden (so Gsell, St./Joly, Ch. A., Khanissa, Mdaourouch, Announa III [1918] 41 und Gsell, St., CRAI 1931, 265-267). Auch hier gilt, daß Ἥρα κούρη in den griechischen Inschriften nicht nachgewiesen werden kann. Außerdem weist nichts darauf hin, daß die Übernahme des Namens aus dem Griechischen in Nordafrika erfolgt sein kann.

Mehr als die Hälfte der H.inschriften stammt aus Obergermanien, mit deutlichem Schwerpunkt im rechtsrheinischen Gebiet, aus dem auch drei der vier inschriftlich benannten Bilder der Göttin stammen. Man wird hier den Ursprung der Göttin suchen müssen, ihr Name sollte demnach eher aus keltischem Sprachgut erklärt werden, was bisher noch nicht ernsthaft versucht worden ist. Das vereinzelte Vorkommen H.s in anderen Provinzen läßt sich leichter mit der Wanderung Einzelner aus Obergermanien dorthin erklären, als mit massiver Einwanderung von H.verehrnern ins Decumatland.

Aus Stuttgart-Bad Cannstatt und Rottenburg stammen auch Befunde, die, neben der gemeinsamen Nennung H.s zusammen mit Dis pater (3. 4), ihre Funktion als Toten- und Unterweltsgöttin sichern: Die Inschriften aus Rottenburg und die Inschriften und Bildwerke aus Stuttgart-Bad Cannstatt (1. 2. 5-7) stammen von den antiken Gräberfeldern (vgl. Haug/Sixt 212 und 363-364; vgl. auch den Fundort von 81).

KATALOG

Als sichere Darstellungen H.s können nur die wenigen inschriftlich benannten Bilder betrachtet werden (A), als zweite Gruppe Darstellungen, die zusammen mit Inschriften gefunden wurden (B), und schließlich alle Reliefs und Statuetten, die dem Typus entsprechen und aus dem Hauptverbreitungsgebiet der Inschriften (vgl. oben) stammen (C). Verläßt man diesen Raum, das Decumatland, wird es unmöglich, Darstellungen H.s von denen anderer keltisch-germanischer Göttinnen zu trennen, die meist unbenannt sind, im gleichen Typus (matronal, thronend) dargestellt werden, aber teilweise abweichende Attribute tragen. Dies trifft auch für die im Artikel → Aeracura genannten Statuetten und Reliefs aus Trier (3e*, f*), Bad Kreuznach, Kr. Bad Kreuznach, und Alesia zu.

Alle Kat.-Nr. außer 3 (Katakombenmalerei) sind aus Sandstein.

KOMMENTAR

Die Ikonographie H.s arbeitet mit einem einzigen Typus, der in den gallisch-germanischen Provinzen allgemein für die Darstellung matronaler Göttinnen verwendet wurde: H. thront frontal und hält im Schoß einen flachen Korb mit Früchten (bei I Ähre in der Hand?). Diese Darstellungsform ist auch bei den beiden Gruppen H.-Dis pater beibehalten, obwohl hier die römische Darstellung (3) Abweichungen aufweist: H. fehlt hier der Fruchtkorb und ihr Mantel ist als Schleier über den Kopf gezogen.

HERILLOS

Der von Fränkel, Namen 72. 106 Nr. χ aufgeführte Krater mit dem Satyrnamen H. in Gela, Slg. Ruggieri, aus Terranova bei Gela (Petersen, E., RM 7, 1892, 184 Nr. 21) ist - in der Literatur bisher nicht vermerkt - identisch mit dem att. rf. Volutenkrater New York, MMA 24.97.25 (Richter/Hall 161-163 Nr. 128 Taf. 127. 171, = Chorillos 3*). Die von Petersen und Fränkel angegebenen Namen H. und Saon sind dann vielmehr Chorillos und -> Sathon zu lesen.

HERKYNA

(Ἑρκυννα, Ἑρκυννα, Hercynna) Nymph of the homonymous spring and river of Levadeia in Boeotia. The story of H. offers the aition for the creation of the spring and river: H. was once playing with -> Persephone in the grove of -> Trophonios when a goose she was holding escaped and hid in a cave under a stone. When Persephone raised the stone water sprang. H. is mentioned as Trophonios' daughter and was worshipped in his sanctuary: There was a temple of H. by the river and statues of H. and Trophonios in the cave. Worshippers coming to consult the oracle washed in the river. H. was also associated with -> Demeter who appears in Levadeia with the epithet Herkyna.

LITERARY SOURCES: Our sources for H. are all late. The story of the creation of the spring and river is told by Pausanias (9, 39, 2) who also mentions the temple of H. by the river and the statues of H. and Trophonios in the cave (9, 39, 3). Livy (45, 27, 8) speaks of a temple of H. and Zeus Trophonios in the latter's grove. H. is mentioned as Trophonios' daughter by Tzet. Lykophron 153 who also ascribes to her the introduction of the cult of Demeter Herkyna in Levadeia. The festival of Herkynia in Levadeia is mentioned by Hesychios (s. v. Ἑρκυννα) as a festival of Demeter.

CATALOGUE

A. Lost works

1. Statue of H. in her temple by the river in Trophonios' sanctuary. - Mentioned by Paus. 9, 39, 3. - H. as a girl carrying a goose.

2. Statues of H. and Trophonios in the cave where the sources of the river. - Mentioned by Paus. 9, 39, 3. - H. and Trophonios in the type of -> Asklepios and -> Hygieia, holding sceptres surrounded by snakes.

B. Uncertain (3-4) or improbable (5) representations

3. Boeotian clay figurines of a woman with voluminous headdress who stands quietly carrying a goose. - E.g., Winter, Typen I 69, 2 (= Aphrodite 132); Mollard-Besques I C 63 pl. 66 (= Aphrodite 131*); carrying different or no attributes: -> Aphrodite 130*; Mollard-Besques I C 59-65 pl. 66. - Late 5th cent. B.C. - Cf. Boeotian clay figurines of a woman without a «wig» carrying a goose: Higgins, BM Terracottas nos. 863, 877, 878 pls. 123, 127 and more examples from Eretria in Metzger pl. 19a-d. - It is possible that the Boeotian clay statuettes of a woman carrying a goose are intended to show the local nymph H., as E. Simon, RA 1972, 218 n. 6, suggested (Leda: Mollard-Besques, Higgins; Aphrodite: -> Aphrodite 131*. 132; Persephone: Metzger).

4.* Limestone relief. Athens, NM 3942. From Levadeia. - Walter, O., ÖJh 31, 1939, 59-70 fig. 23; Nilsson, GrRel 11 642 pl. 10, 3. - 3rd cent. B.C. - In the centre, among other deities and worshippers, a man holding a keras with snakes beside him, and a woman carrying torches, possibly H. and Trophonios (Metzger).

The interpretation of the figures as H. and Zeus-Trophonios (Avellino, followed by Stephani) is not plausible.

COMMENTARY

There are no certain representations of H. in art. It is possible that the Boeotian clay figurines of a woman carrying a goose (3) show the nymph with her characteristic attribute. Other Boeotian figurines of a woman with elaborate hairstyle, carrying different or no attributes, might also be regarded as the local H., since they are probably anonymous nymphs.

On 4 we might have H. and Trophonios shown in the type of -> Persephone and Plouton (-> Hades). The chthonic character of both H. and Trophonios (H. was associated with Persephone and the underworld goddess Demeter Herkyna), as well as the provenance of the relief, would support the identification.

HERMANUBIS

SOURCES LITTÉRAIRES: Le vocable H. n'apparaît que deux fois dans les textes littéraires: chez Plutarque (de Is. et Os. 375e-f) et dans une citation de Porphyre rapportée par Eusèbe de Césarée (Bidez, J., Vie de Porphyre [1913] 17*-18*, de imaginibus frg. 8). Il convient cependant de remarquer que Plutarque qui donne le nom d'H. à l'aspect proprement chthonien d'Anubis semble faire plutôt allusion à l'H. psychopompe des cultes isiaques. En revanche, le texte de Porphyre consacré à l'aspect universel d' -> Hermès manifesté par H. en Égypte semble quant à lui évoquer la divinité qui nous intéresse ici en la qualifiant de «composite» (σύνθετος) et de «à moitié grecque» (μυξέλλην).

CATALOGUE

H. se présente sous l'aspect d'un jeune homme imberbe à l'abondante chevelure formée de grosses mèches séparées par une raie médiane. Il est vêtu d'un himation qui, ordinairement, lui enserrant le bas du buste et les cuisses et dont un pan passé dans le dos retombe en avant par-dessus son épaule gauche. Sa coiffure est le modius souvent orné d'un pétale de lotus plaqué sur le devant. Ses attributs sont la palme et le caducée. Normalement, H. porte la palme à la main g. et le caducée à la main dr. Cependant, quand sur les monnaies son buste seul est visible, ces deux attributs sont généralement confondus: le caducée est alors surmonté de la palme à laquelle il sert de tige et cet ensemble se place d'ordinaire à la g. d'H. Enfin, lorsqu'H. est représenté en pied, il est fréquent qu'un chien l'accompagne assis à terre ou passant.

REPRÉSENTATIONS INCERTAINES

REPRÉSENTATIONS INCERTAINES

REPRÉSENTATIONS À ÉCARTER

Il convient de ne pas retenir certaines représentations entièrement anthropomorphes d'Anubis (?) qui ne sauraient être confondues avec H. tel qu'il est défini ici: cf. par ex. le personnage coiffé d'un pschent mis devant derrière, et muni d'un aileron apparaissant avec Sarapis, Isis et Harpocrate sur le disque d'une lampe trouvée à Rome sur l'Esquilin (Rome, Antiquarium Comunale 5237. - Tran Tam Tinh, V., RA 1970, 1, 76 fig. 22) de même que l'homme voilé (?) tenant sistre, caducée et situle dans deux peintures pompéiennes montrant la réception d'Isis par Isis (Naples, Mus. Naz. 9555 et 9558. - Tran Tam Tinh, V., Essai sur le culte d'Isis à Pompéi [1964] 128 n° 14 pl. 16, 2 [Isis 266] et 138 n° 40 pl. 6 [Isis 265]).

COMMENTAIRE

Les types monétaires émis sous Trajan fixèrent l'iconographie d'H. aussi bien pour l'imagerie numismatique jusqu'à la fin du III<sup>e</sup> s. ap. J.-C. (7-13) que pour les autres types de documents (statues, statuettes) qui s'en inspirèrent visiblement et dont aucun n'est antérieur à la fin du II<sup>e</sup> voire au début du III<sup>e</sup> s. ap. J.-C. (1. 2. 14-21).

Comme l'Anubis des cultes isiaques, H. est bien l'expression d'une fusion entre Hermès (palme et caducée) et Anubis (chien). Cependant, aux caractères essentiellement funéraires de l'Anubis des cultes isiaques qui avait conservé la tête de chien du momificateur ritualiste du mythe osirien et qui n'avait pris d'Hermès que la palme du triomphe sur la mort et le caducée du psychopompe, H. ajoute une dimension nouvelle: il entre dans la catégorie des dieux à «tendance universaliste» pour reprendre l'heureuse expression de J. Schwartz. Ce n'est pas que l'on ne puisse pas déceler cette «tendance universaliste» chez l'Anubis des cultes isiaques mais elle restait un caractère secondaire alors qu'elle devint l'élément, semble-t-il, essentiel d'H. L'aspect universel d'H. se manifeste par le total anthropomorphisme et le port du modius. Il fut sans doute traduit par le vocable Hermanubis selon un procédé bien attesté dans l'Egypte romaine consistant à associer le nom Hermès considéré en ce cas en tant que «principe universel» à celui de la divinité dont on voulait souligner l'universalité (cf. les noms divins Hermammôn, Hermantinoos, Herméraklès, etc.). Il est intéressant de constater que son anthropomorphisme fait d'H. une sorte de doublet de Sarapis: le visage du jeune homme à la lourde chevelure coiffée du modius semble avoir été conçu à dessein pour lui donner l'aspect d'un «Sarapis jeune» (cf. surtout 1. 14-16 et les revers monétaires 8-13). De fait, souvent associé à Sarapis (6a-b. 9. 12. 13c), H. comme le grand dieu alexandrin doubla sa nature chthonienne (entre autres bien précisée par son association avec Déméter [19] dont une fois [1] il tient la torche) de caractères solaires bien marqués: couronne radiée (7c. 8g. 10a), tête aurée (8f. 15), disque solaire décorant le modius (8d) ou la palme (14), corne d'Ammon (10a), visage doré (15). Ce sont là autant d'éléments que résume parfaitement un graffiti des carrières du Gebel Toukh proclamant: «Un même dieu est Zeus-Sarapis et Helios-Hermanubis» (Preisigke, F., et al., Sammelbuch griechischer Urkunden aus Ägypten I [1913] 238).

Il se peut que cette promotion d'Anubis au rang de divinité universelle par le biais d'H. ait eu pour but de préciser son rôle au sein de la famille alexandrine (où il n'était qu'un acolyte à l'instar de sa fonction dans le mythe osirien) en créant avec Sarapis une relation semblable à celle qui unissait Harpocrate à Isis. Cependant, H. demeura toujours une divinité «officielle». Malgré l'intense propagande dont il bénéficia (abondance des revers monétaires) et l'existence de statues de culte à son image (14-16 et peut-être 29), son impact dans la religion populaire semble être resté limité (rareté des terres cuites [2. 17-19] et de la petite statuaire [20. 21. 30?]) et sans doute il ne supplantait pas le vieil Anubis (la terre cuite 18 montre à la fois H. et Anubis dans la famille alexandrine). De plus, il ne semble pas être vraiment sorti des frontières de l'Egypte sinon, encore une fois, uniquement en tant que divinité officielle comme l'atteste la tête de Carthage (15) provenant du Sarapieion de cette ville.

HERMAPHRODITOS

(Ἑρμαφρόδιτος, Hermaphroditus) H., the personage in Greek and Roman myth and iconography possessing both male and female sexual features, first appears in Greek literary and epigraphical sources in the 4th cent. B.C., although a pedigree as the offspring of Hermes and Aphrodite is not provided before the mid-1st cent. B.C. In addition to the proper name H., the term used generically, along with its adjectival form describes these Mischwesen as they are reported by various authors to occur in nature.

LITERARY SOURCES: Earliest mention of the name Hermaphroditos occurs in Theophr. (370-288 B.C.) char. 16, 10 (written after 319 B.C.): The Superstitious Man, in addition to many other compulsive acts of piety, hangs garlands on H. on the fourth and seventh days of each month. The fourth day of the month, according to Hom. h. Merc. 19 and Schol. Hes. erg. 700a. 800b (Mikalson, J. D., The Sacred and Civil Calendar of the Athenian Year [1979] 16-17) was considered by the Greeks sacred to both Hermes and Aphrodite. The seventh day of the month, however, is dedicated only to Apollo, and the Superstitious Man's activities on this extra day have been interpreted as another instance of his excessive religious zeal. It has been argued (Kieseritzky, C., Adl 54, 1882, 264) that in fact the Superstitious Man did not actually honor the image of a bisexual divinity but a herm of Aphrodite, on analogy with other - considerably later - compound names referring to hermaic sculptures with the heads of divinities: Hermathena (Cic. Att. 1, 1, 5; 1, 4, 3); Hermeros (Plin. nat. 36, 33); Hermerakles (Cic. Att. 1, 10, 3; Milet 17, 354 no. 305) (but see Harrison, E., Agora XI [1965] 125, who suggests that such combinations may have been created to Roman taste and specifications). Other editors of Theophr. avoid the problem altogether: Steinmetz (1960, 197) reads 16, 10 Ἑρμᾶς, ἀφροδῖτον and Diels (1909, 16, 11 n. 24) had suggested Ἑρμᾶς ῥοδίονος. Other editors (Jebb 1909, Ussher 1960), however, accept the reading Ἑρμαφρόδιτος which is supported not only by the devotions of the Superstitious Man on the fourth day of each month, with its special association with Hermes and Aphrodite, but also by a votive dedication to H. that has been dated by letter forms early in the 4th cent. B.C. (see Epigraphical Evidence, below).

All other sources mentioning H., like most of the preserved representations, are fairly late, except for a lost play entitled Ἑρμαφρόδιτος, by the Greek comic writer Poseidippus, active during the 1st quarter of the 3rd cent. B.C. (CAF III 338-339 frag. 11; only title and one couplet preserved). After this drama, there is apparent silence on the subject until Diod. (4, 6, 5), writing in the mid-1st cent. B.C., provides the first genealogy for H., not surprisingly the offspring of Hermes and Aphrodite.

The best known discussion of H. is Ovid's lengthy aetiological tale (met. 4, 285-388). H. here is the male child of Aphrodite and Hermes who leaves his native Mount Ida on Crete as a youth and travels through Asia Minor. In Caria the nymph of a spring called Salmacis (nymph and spring share this name with an actual ancient site not far from Halicarnassus) falls in love with the boy, who rejects her advances. One day as H. swims in the spring, Salmacis dives in too and surrounds the boy in an inextricable embrace, entreating the gods as she does so that the two might never be parted. They grant her prayer; boy and nymph are fused, creating a new, bisexual persona. That H. retains something of his old nature, however, seems clear from his subsequent prayer to the gods, that the waters of the spring Salmacis thereafter have an enervating effect on any man who enters them; and in fact, Ovid begins his narrative about H. by promising to explain the cause of this phenomenon, apparently well known in antiquity. These weakening properties of the spring Salmacis are also discussed by Vitruvius (2, 8, 11-12), who says that a temple of Mercury and Venus was located nearby, although he does not mention H. No trace of such a temple has been found at the ancient site of Salmacis.

A cluster of later authors was intrigued by the paradoxical nature of this half-male, half-female creature. On Martialis 14, 174 see 2. Elsewhere, Martialis (6, 68) mentions H. and Salmacis, and at 10, 4 he includes H. in a list of characters from mythological tales.

Lukianos in the dialogi deorum mentions H. twice: 17, 2 Apollo and Hermes discuss H.'s parentage and 3, 1 Apollo and Dionysos compare Aphrodite's offspring, Priapos, Eros, and H., each of whom had a different father.

According to Alkiphron epistulae rusticae 2, 35, there was a rural shrine to H. at Alopeke near Athens at which a widow placed wreaths of flowers in honor of her dead husband. Emendations have been suggested for this passage as well: Lobeck, C. A., Aglaophamus (1829) II 1007 n. [b] suggested that H. was in fact the name of the deceased; others read Ἑρμα Φαίδριον (Meineke, Schepers).

H. makes an appearance in Hyginus's list of the most beautiful young men (fab. 271), which provides the only other instance of H.'s alternate name Atlantes (Wernicke, K., RE II 2 [1896] 2109 s. v. «Atlantes»).

Interest in H. had not abated at the end of the 4th cent. A.D. Ausonius, in epigr. 102, sees H. as a neutral creature, unable to enjoy passion either as a man or a woman, but in the next epigram, where the poet discusses Salmacis, he seems to contradict himself. Here, both Salmacis and H., are said to achieve an especially intense degree of sexual pleasure.

An epigram in the Anth. Pal. (9, 783) is spoken by a sculpture of H. him/herself, presiding over a bath used by both men and women. Anth. Pal. 9, 317 takes the form of a dialogue between H. and Silenus (→ Silenos, Silenoi), and may reflect a tradition now preserved only in wall paintings from Pompeii. Here Silenus boasts to a goatherd that he had made love to H. three times that day, and H. protests, swearing by Hermes that this had not occurred; Silenus retorts by swearing by Pan that indeed it had.

Finally, Ps.-Lukianos philopat. 24, in the 10th cent., once again refers to H.'s parentage.

EPIGRAPHICAL EVIDENCE: Only two inscriptions mention H. (also see 4): The earlier inscription, on a small inscribed base found in Attic Vari, has been dated by letter forms to the early 4th cent. B.C., and bears a votive inscription to H.: [Φ]ανὸν Ἑρμαφροδίτην (sic) ταῖς εὐχαρίστησιν. This modest, roughly lettered base probably supported a small sculpture or herm, now missing, and not a stele, because the cutting is square rather than rectangular, and demonstrates that as early as the 4th cent. B. C. there was some form of cult activity involving H. (Threatte, L., The Grammar of Attic Inscriptions I [1980] 51 no. 7; Kirchner, J./Dow, S., AM 62, 1937, 7-8 no. 5 pl. 4, 3).

I. Literary and epigraphical sources referring to sculptures of Hermaphroditos

I. Plin. nat. 34, 80 provides the only reference in ancient testimonia to the sculptor of an hermaphrodite. According to him, an artist called Polykles created a bronze Hermaphroditus nobilis. But it is not clear from this passage which of three artists with this name mentioned by Plin. is meant here. The earliest Polykles flourished in the 102nd Olympiad, 372-369 B. C. (Plin. nat. 34, 50). A Polykles of Athens (Plin. nat. 34, 52) was active in the important 156th Olympiad (156-153 B. C.) and apparently played a role in the artistic revival of that period. It is to this artist that modern critics have generally attributed the bronze Hermaphroditus nobilis. Polykles' son Timarchides also had a son called Polykles, who is by Plin. nat. 36, 35 said to have worked in Rome during the 2nd half of the 2nd cent. B. C., so there are really two 2nd cent. candidates for the authorship of the Hermaphroditus nobilis: Polykles, and his grandson of the same name (on the complicated stemma of Polykles see Pollitt, J. J., Art in the Hellenistic Age [1986] 174, 313 n. 12; Stewart, A., Attika [1979] 42-46; Coarelli, F., «Polykles», StudMisc 15, 1969, 175-89; Becatti, G., RivIstArch 7, 1940, 7-116). Among the sculptural types of H. the Sleeping Type (Section IV A) is most often associated with the Hermaphroditus nobilis by Polykles, although the so-called Berlin hermaphrodite (5-5c) has also been proposed.

2. Martial's apophoreta, a collection of epigrams each describing a sculpture or painting, includes one (14, 174) addressed to a marble sculpture of H. (Lehmann, K., «A Roman Poet Visits a Museum», Hesperia 14, 1945, 259-269).

3. Christodoros of Thebes, Anth. Pal. 2, 102-107, provides the latest evidence for the existence of a sculpture of H., a bronze work in the Baths of Zeuxippos in Constantinople. This sculpture, along with a great many others described by Christod., was burned in A. D. 532 (Stupperich, R., «Das Statuenprogramm in den Zeuxippos-Thermen», IstMitt 32, 1982, 210-235).

4. A fragmentary inscription found in the Athenian Agora has been interpreted as an inventory of the sculptures of gods and other mythological figures that stood in various areas of a gymnasium. It has been dated by letter forms to the 2nd half of the 2nd cent. B. C. The name H. occurs toward the end of the inscription and has been understood as referring to one of the sculptures. What is important here is the evidence that in the 2nd cent. B. C. there was a sculpture of H., and that it was appropriate decoration in presumably an Athenian gymnasium (Clay, D., Hesperia 46, 1977, 259-267).

II. Hermaphroditos alone, nude or semi-draped

H. appears in a variety of frontal, standing compositions, nude, or semi-draped and in iconography and pose closely allied with Aphrodite. 5-5c below are completely nude, except for a feminine headdress. Elsewhere, H. fastens on a strophium, holds a mantle up behind forming a screen for the body, or wears a swath of mantle draped across the hips, revealing the male genitals. Most abundant of all types are images of H. anasyromenos, where the formal gesture of «lifting up» reveals the often erect phallus.

A. Hermaphroditos, nude, standing

ROMAN

The so-called Berlin H. (5) is the best preserved example of H. nude except for short, folded veil. H. stands with weight on l. leg, r. leg drawn back, l. arm lowered at side, r. raised and held out. A head of the same type, a torso, and a bronze figurine have been grouped with this figure. The veil has variously been called klaft, kalvatica, kekryphalos or mitra and is worn by women on gems of the early 3rd cent. B. C., and by the Horae (→ Horai/Horae), for example on 3rd cent. terra sigillata. It should be noted that a similar short, handkerchief-like headdress is worn by later figures as well: the bronze figurine of a dancing dwarf from the Mahdia shipwreck, an old woman captive on the Column of Trajan in Rome, and the seated old woman with lagynos by «Myron». E. Simon has suggested, in fact, that the short veil worn by the old drunken woman is the emblem of her role as priestess/nurse of Dionysos (GGA 236, 1984, 32-33). Whether the head covering here has cult meaning or would have been immediately recognizable as a female garment, worn as a contrast to the youthful male body, is unclear (for headdress see Wrede, H., RM 95, 1988, 100-101; Marabini Moevs, M. T., BollArte 42, 1987, 17-18; Kurtz, D. C./Boardman, J., GettyVases III [1986] 50-56; Brandenburg, H., Studien zur Mitra [1966] 94). Besides the distinctive Berlin type, other varieties of H. nude are represented here.

7. Marble figurine. Nîmes, Maison Carrée. - Espérandieu, Recueil III no. 2662. - Nude H. lacks head, both lowered arms below shoulders, l. leg at knee, r. leg at mid-calf.

Bronze figurines

8.* Support for candelabrum. Rome, Pal. Cons. - Delcourt 28 pl. 2; Stuart Jones, SculptPalCons 288-289 pl. 115. - Nude, frontal H., legs flexed, arms outstretched, hands positioned to support object; distinctly female breasts, erect phallus.

9.* Bad Deutsch-Altenburg, Mus. Carnuntinum 11950. From Carnuntum? - Fleischer, R., Die römischen Bronzen aus Österreich (1967) no. 185 pl. 98; Swoboda, E., Carnuntum (1964) 98 pl. 13, 1. - Both hands missing. Nude H. stands with weight on r. leg, l. flexed, raises l. hand, r. arm at sides. On head, animal ears(?) or horns(?), with two holes pierced in crown of head.

B. Hermaphroditos nude, kallipygos/dancing

Representations of H. kallipygos are restricted to a small group of bronze figurines and Neo-Attic reliefs; there are apparently no large scale sculptures in stone with this motif. Characteristic of the type is its torsional pose, usually understood as a dance movement. H. steps forward on the r. foot, with head turned back, usually over the r. shoulder, r. arm lowered, l. arm held up. These figures are usually compared with those of Aphrodite Kallipygos (→ Aphrodite 765-771), who raises her garment and looks back over her r. shoulder, drawing attention to her bared buttocks. Four small bronzes of H. provide an additional motivation for this pose. Here H. holds a folding mirror open in the lowered r. hand and secures the ends of a short headdress with the l. hand. Glancing over its shoulder, H. can glimpse not only its own buttocks, but perhaps also its face reflected in the mirror. These figures are all ithyphallic, the conceit of the type being perhaps that H.'s male aspect is aroused by its female attributes. Not all figures in this general pose hold a mirror but this same effect is really achieved in a more direct way by the examples where H., like Aphrodite, simply looks back over its shoulder. H. similarly posed in Neo-Attic reliefs has been generally interpreted as a dancer, but here too a round object is occasionally held in the r. hand.

Reliefs

The same Dionysiac scene with H., a bearded, drunken Dionysos and dancing companions is reproduced in at least three Neo-Attic krater reliefs: two fr. examples from the Mahdia shipwreck, and the better preserved 14b in Pisa. The existence of the Camposanto krater presupposes other models of this same type, since the Mahdia examples were submerged ca. 100 B.C. H. similarly posed also appears alone in a panel, as in 14. 14d. 14e. In these two-dimensional examples, the use of extreme torsion and of features rendered in profile effectively compresses this image of H.

ROMAN

15.* Bronze figurine. Paris, Cab. Méd. Br 308. - Babelon/Blanchet, BiblNatBronzes 137 Nr. 308. - Roman. - Nude H. kneels, holds arms by sides with palms facing out. Wears diadem over centrally parted hair with long locks falling onto shoulder and chest; female breasts, male genitals.

D. Hermaphroditos semi-nude, standing

H., like Aphrodite (→ Aphrodite 774-783), occasionally poses with drapery held out behind, providing a backdrop for the body. But → Narkissos also holds his mantle in this fashion, and when the motif appears on gems, it is sometimes difficult to identify the figure either as H. or Narcissus, since both are usually rendered with immature, fleshy male physiques (Zanker, P., BonnJbb 166, 1966, 166). H. is recognizable in 16, but other examples are more ambiguous (80, for example).

R., JHS 11, 1890, 188. - 2nd half of 2nd cent. B.C. - Large (1.85 m. with plinth) semi-draped H., weight on r. leg, l. knee forward, rests l. arm on top of tree trunk support. Torso bare, mantle draped over l. arm and support, curves down below groin to reveal male genitals. In pose and arrangement of drapery this type is closely allied with types of Aphrodite, Dionysos and Apollo. The bisexual nature of this figure is reflected in the imaginary sandal type that combines elements of both male and female footwear.

18a) Marble figurine. New York, Priv. coll. From Rhodes? - Bieber, SculptHell 125, n. 10 fig. 492. - Same pose and drapery as 18.

E. Hermaphroditos semi-nude, seated

27. Sardonyx cameo. Ionides Coll. (ex Coll. Marlborough). - Boardman, J., Engraved Gems. The Ionides Collection (1968) No. 62. - H. seated, legs crossed at ankles, holds up edge of drapery away from body, revealing female breasts and erect phallus. For H. in a similar pose, surrounded by Erotes, see 61-62 below.

F. Herm of Hermaphroditos semi-nude

28. Marble. Berlin (DDR), Staatl. Mus. From Pergamon. - Wrede, H., Die antike Herme (1986) 26; Ohlmutz, o.c. 17, 266; Winter, F., Pergamon VII 2 (1908) 221. - Nude torso with female breasts, male genitals; head and arms dowelled on, now missing. Edge of mantle slung over l. shoulder, the rest draped behind figure. Division of legs below the genitals indicated on herm shaft.

III. Hermaphroditos alone, draped

A. Standing

29. Marble figurine. Kos, Mus. From Kos. - Kabus-Preißhofen, o.c. 17, 159; Linfert, A., Kunstzentren hellenistischer Zeit (1976) 77 n. 271b; Laurenzi, L., in Studi in onore di A. Calderini e R. Paribeni III (1956) 184 figs. 1-2. - Mid 2nd cent. B.C. - Figure lacks head and arms (dowelled on); wears high belted chiton and mantle draped around hips. Edges of garment part on r. side revealing r. female breast and male genitals.

B. Hermaphroditos anasyromenos

Representations of H. in the so-called anasyromenos pose constitute the largest single group of figures and some of these are among the earliest depictions: large scale marble works and many marble, terracotta, and bronze figurines. Drawing on a tradition of pose and iconography associated also with Aphrodite and shared by several other mythological figures -> Attis,

-> Baubo, -> Isis, -> Priapos - this formal gesture of exhibiting and emphasizing the genitals has here the additional function of clarifying an otherwise ambiguous situation (King, H., «Agnodike and the Profession of Medicine» Proc. Cam. Phil. Soc. 32, 1986, 53-77; Herter, H., De Priapo [1932] 8, 20. 180-182. 288, 302). H's costume is fairly standard: high belted chiton, sleeveless or with short sleeves, often a mantle, draped over both shoulders or arms, sometimes also covering the head. Both breasts are usually draped, but in one type, found both in Alexandria and Southern Italy, the slipped sleeve or strap (usually the l.) exposes the female breast. H. raises the skirt of the garment with one or both hands revealing the phallus, generally erect. Priapos often appears in a similar costume, even with what seem to be feminine breasts beneath the chiton, although this could be a representation of his generally corpulent body. Like Priapos, H. occasionally holds fruit in the raised folds of the skirt and, in at least two instances a small Eros. Priapos also appears with Erotes or babies in a similar pose.

45. Marble statue. Once Rome, Art Market. - H. wears high belted, sleeveless chiton, mantle draped over right shoulder and left arm, raises skirt with both hands to reveal erect phallus. Head lowered slightly, hair drawn back from central part, bound with fillet, ends gathered at back of head.

46. Marble figurine. Philadelphia, Univ. Mus. MS 5970. - Imperial. - H. wearing high belted chiton raises skirt with both hands.

47. Bronze figurine. Bordeaux, Coll. Mateo Petit. From Bordeaux. - Perdrizet, o.c. 41, 6 pl. IV; Reinach, RépStat II 1, 337, 4. - Surface badly eroded. Weight on l. leg, right bent, head inclined slightly to r. H. with long chiton, short sleeve slipped off l. shoulder, revealing l. female breast; holds skirt up in both hands exposing male genitals. Hair centrally parted and pulled back, knot on crown of head and bun at nape of neck.

C. Herms of Hermaphroditos anasyromenos

Most herms of H. are of anasyromenos type and nearly all are small, with the exception of 48 from Pergamon. Two anasyromenos varieties have been recognized (Wrede, H., Die antike Herme [1986] 25-26). The more common form has a tapering shaft, and H. usually wears the traditional high belted chiton and mantle, with arms carved away from the shaft, raising the front of the garment. H. occasionally wears a polos or a mantle or veil over the head, with the ends hanging down along the sides of the herm shaft. The second type (52-54), apparently carved without arms, has all details rendered directly onto the rectangular shaft. Female breasts draped but evident, the front of the garment here is raised and tucked behind the erect phallus itself. A few examples of a third herm variety, semi-nude, are known (28 above). Also see V A below, for anasyromenos herms of H. used as supports in groups with Aphrodite.

GREEK, TYPE 1

48. Marble. Pergamon, Mus. From Pergamon. - Wrede 25; Ohlmutz, o.c. 17, 266; Winter, o.c. 28, 220-221 fig. - Measuring 1.24 m. this is the largest herm of H. anasyromenos. H. (head with neck and shoulders, l. arm, phallus dowelled on but now missing) wears high belted, short sleeved chiton; raises garment with l. hand only. Wears mantle over shoulders, ends of this along with folds of chiton carved in high relief on both sides of herm shaft.

49.* Miniature herm, marble. Athens, Agora S 1234. From Athens, Agora. - Wrede 25; Harrison, o.c. 32, 140. 173. no. 231, pl. 60; Thompson, o.c. 32, 180 n. 59. - Late Hellenistic-early Roman. - Head and lower end of shaft missing. H. wears high belted chiton, mantle draped over both arms is also carved across lower back of figure, ends hang down on each side of herm shaft. H. raises front of garment with both hands revealing erect phallus. Shaft modelled slightly below genitals to indicate the contour of the legs.

ROMAN, TYPE 1

50.* Marble. Once Rome, Art Market. - Wrede 25; EA 185; Reinach, RépStat II 2, 526, 1. - H. in high belted chiton raises it with both hands to reveal the erect phallus. Mantle draped over both shoulders (arms below shoulders now missing) with ends hanging down on both sides of shaft. Hair with central part pulled back, fillet, topknot, a lock rests on each shoulder.

51. Marble. Stockholm, Mus. - Wrede 25; Delcourt 64-65 pl. 6; Reinach, RépStat I 371, 7. - H. wearing high belted chiton, mantle on both shoulders, ends hanging down on both sides of herm shaft; phallus erect, separation of legs below genitals indicated on shaft; feet added at bottom of shaft. H. holds fruit in pouch formed by raised draperies, and on head a high fruit-filled polos.

GREEK, TYPE 2

52. Miniature herm, marble. Rome, Barracco Mus. - Wrede 25; Robert, C., AdI 1884, 88-89 pl. L. - Late 1st cent. B.C. - early 1st cent. A.D. - Rectangular herm shaft, no arms. H. wears garment belted on top of overfold just below breast. Front of garment draped to reveal erect phallus.

53. Miniature herm, marble. Pompeii, Antiquarium. From Pompeii. - Wrede 25; Sogliano, A., NSc 1905, 175 fig. 276. - As 52.

IV. Hermaphroditos reclining

A. Hermaphroditos recumbent on stomach

The so-called Sleeping Hermaphrodite, one of the most frequently illustrated and best known of all H. sculptural types is represented by six relatively complete replicas, one fragment and three variants. The Greek inspiration of these works is often associated with the bronze Hermaphroditus nobilis usually attributed to the 2nd cent. Polykles (see I). However, Plin. does not say that Polykles, whichever one he meant, made a sleeping figure, so this attribution remains at best highly tentative. All the figures, except for the smaller 56g, measure approximately 1.48 m. in the contracted pose. Hairstyle is complex and distinctive, with a central parting and braid decorated with an oval jewel, a fillet securing long, rolled locks, and a bun at the nape of the neck from which some locks and wisps of hair escape. The figure lies asleep on its stomach, but its restless torsion twists the upper body and head to the r., and shifts the hips in the opposite direction, raising the l. side enough so that the erect phallus and the swelling l. breast are visible. Straightening, the r. leg stretches taut an edge of drapery around the flexed r. foot. The l. leg weighs down a section of fabric, drawing it back over the r. calf. In its sleeping movements the creature, entangled in the drapery, thrusts the l. leg free of this constriction. Muffled in folds of fabric, the l. arm cushions the head, but the bent r. arm is free, corresponding in horizontal chiasmus to the bare, projecting l. foot. The visual impact of this work derives from its disregard for frontality and its manipulation of front and back; both sides convey essential information. It has been suggested that the viewer was intended to approach the sculpture from behind, first seeing what he thought was a sleeping woman, and then discovering the truth by circling around the figure. That the back of the figure was in fact the point of primary approach is supported by the appearance of 56b. Enough of the rocky plinth is preserved here to show that it is thicker on the side supporting the back of the figure, with the details of the rock more carefully worked than on the other side, where the front of the figure is revealed. Here the plinth is distinctly thinner and less detailed. In general, the proportions of these figures emphasize the buttocks, with relatively narrow shoulders, and, for the length of the body, a small face (ca. 0.13 m). For pose, parallels from the 2nd cent. B.C. include most notably the terracotta figurine of a woman, found in a 2nd cent. B.C. grave in Taranto (De Juliis, E./Loiacono, D., Taranto: Il Mus. Arch. [1985] 386 no. 474), who sleeps on an animal skin in virtually this same pose. Also illuminating are the fragments of terracotta pedimental scenes dated within the 2nd cent. B.C. and found at Civitalba (Andrén, A., Architectural Terracottas from Etrusco-Italic Temples [1940] 298-300 no. I.1; I.3 pls. 98, 100). These groups include a satyr lifting the drapery from a sleeping woman, probably Ariadne, shown from the front. In another fragment with a similar scene the lifted drapery reveals the back of the woman. While all the marble replicas of this Ariadne type, and those of the Sleeping Hermaphrodite type have been dated in the 1st or 2nd cent. A.D., the terracotta figurine, with its secure early context, along with the terracotta pedimental groups, provides evidence for a late Hellenistic prototype. It has been assumed that this figure is part of a genre group of Dionysiac sleepers - nymphs or maenads, satyrs and Eroses - and has not been identified with a specific mythological character, like some Roman works thought to represent the sleeping Endymion or Ariadne. It is at least a possibility that the Sleeping H. type might reflect some version of the story of the androgynous Agdistis, in a drunken sleep at the moment before the emasculation discussed below (Commentary). Such a narrative setting for the composition would account for the often noted restlessness of pose, the erect phallus, and the rocky landscape plinth. While the group of preserved replicas is relatively small, most of these works are from Italian, primarily Roman, contexts, and one at least is said to come from Hadrian's Villa at Tivoli. Both replicas found in Greece are variants of the type, a reduced version found at Kos, and a sleeping woman found on the South Slope of the Athenian Akropolis. The confined distribution and dating suggest some specific impulse for the generation of the type primarily for a Roman clientele.

56e) Rome, Villa Borghese 749. Haskell/Penny 235 no. 2; Helbig II no. 1978. - Lacks original plinth; head, mattress and sheets sculpted by Bergondi in the mid-18th cent.

56f) Leningrad, Ermitage A 374. From Tivoli, Villa of Hadrian. - 1st-2nd cent. A.D. - Waldhauer, Skulpt II 52 no. 166 fig. 54. - Animal skin draped over plinth.

56g) Kos, Mus. 66. From Kos. - Laurenzi, L., ASAtene 17/18, 1955/56, 113 Nr. 104. - Replica in reduced scale (0.41 m. preserved length) with erect phallus intact.

56h) Pittsburgh, Carnegie Institute Mus. 72.42.2 (formerly Coll. Canessa). From Rome. - Vermeule, C., Greek and Roman Sculpture in American Collections (1981) 181 no. 148 fig. - Upper part of figure preserved to waist, with original plinth. This is the only replica in which the l. hand holds a branch bearing poppies or pomegranates. Like 56d the identity of this work as H. remains uncertain because the lower portion of the body is lacking, but matches the type in details of hairstyle and pose.

56j) Aix, Mus. - MusNazRom I 1, 124; I 6, 106. - Included in MusNazRom entries as replica of Sleeping H. type, but not ancient.

B. Hermaphroditos recumbent on back

Another group of reclining figures corresponds closely in pose to numerous Roman sculptures of sleeping nymphs (on these works see Fabbriotti, E., 'Ninfe Dormienti: Tentativo di Classificazione', StudMisc 22, 1974/75, 65-71). H. sleeping alone is included here; for other examples originally surrounded by infants, see Section V G below.

Gems

58.* Glass. Munich, Münzslg. A 2895. - AGDI 3, no. 3506 pl. 330. - Imperial. - H. reclines on back, one hand on thigh, holds thyrsus.

V. Hermaphroditos with others

A. Aphrodite

60. Relief. Delos, Mus. A 4017. From Delos. - Marcadé, MusDélôs 402 n. 3; 440 n. 2; idem, BCH Suppl. 1, 1973, 342 no. 9 fig. 22. - Hellenistic. Relief plaque with projecting ledge along bottom. Central, nude Aphrodite in Cnidia's pose with weight on r. leg, l. flexed, lowers drapery held in l. hand over vessel, covers genital area with lowered r. hand. To A.'s r., small Eros, head turned toward A. holds alabastron in r. hand, supports large shell in l. To l. of A., herm of H. on base, nude, phallus erect.

61.* Marble figurine fr. Delos, Mus. A 5002. From Delos. - Marcadé, MusDélôs 235 n. 2 pl. 45; idem, BCH Suppl. 1, 1973, 346 fig. 20. - Late 2nd cent. B.C. - Statue of H. in sleeveless, high belted chiton and polos stands on base, raising garment with both hands to reveal erect phallus. Probably goes with A 5001, nude figurine of Aphrodite (→ Aphrodite 518*) as support.

62.* Marble figurine. Corfu, Gymnasium. - EA 604b. - Aphrodite leans to her l. on statuette of H. anasyromenos wearing kalathos and standing on pedestal. H. with weight on l. leg, r. leg bent, wears chiton covering both breasts, raises skirt with both hands to reveal genitals.

B. Satyr

a) Satyr as aggressor

Represented by at least twenty-seven replicas, this group of struggling satyr and H. is the most frequently produced large-scale sculptural type in the H. assemblage. Best known is the example in Dresden (63d). The composition, with tangled limbs and off balance poses, is complex. It is related to, but not the same as, the group of sculptures depicting a struggling nymph and satyr. Here, the bearded satyr, seated and leaning back on a small rocky outcropping, surrounds H. with his arms and legs. H., struggling against him, pushes the satyr's head back with the l. hand, and grasps his r. foot with the r. hand in an attempt to free its hips from the satyr's ensnaring legs. The limbs of the opponents, intricately engaged, jut out into space and at the same time provide a system of supports to sustain a composition with relatively few points of contact with the plinth. The satyr's rocky seat is generally small, and the l. knee and l. toes of H. are the only places, in some replicas, where this figure makes contact with the plinth. For these Roman replicas a Hellenistic, probably sculptural prototype has been assumed, although Schmidt (1925) argued for a painted inspiration. The scene is also rendered two-dimensionally, on a gem, on a clay sealing, in a painting, and a mosaic. The scenes on the gem, the sealing and in the painting have been identified as Satyr and H. through the similarity in pose with three-dimensional renderings since, in both, H. is shown from the rear and it is thus impossible to make an identification by attributes. Questions concerning the correct point of view for this work were raised by Schmidt, Krahmer, and Levi, but that the composition is legible only from certain angles now seems less certain than once was suggested. Levi proposed that the two mosaic panels from the paving of the colonnade at the House of the Boat of Psyche at Daphne, one showing a front view of the group, one a back view, draw upon two sculptural works, one intended to be viewed from the front, the other from the back. In fact, fragments of at least two such groups (63n-o) were excavated in the Theater at Daphne. The composition was produced in three distinct scales. 63d-p are the largest, preserved height approximately 1.00 m., 63q-u have a preserved height of ca. 0.60 m., and there are at least two bronze figurines of the subject (63v-w). This group, and the nymph vs. satyr groups have been tentatively associated with a type of sculpture called a symplegma by Plin. One of these compositions created by Kephisodotos, the son of Praxiteles, stood at Pergamon, and according to Plin. nat. 36, 24, involved the pressing of fingers into flesh. Heliodorus (ca. 100 B.C.) according to Plin. nat. 36, 35 made a group of Olympus fighting with Pan. The second most famous symplegma in the world, says Plin., this work could be seen in the Porticus Octavia in Rome. These references, along with epigram 12, 43 of Martialis, where the word symplegma is clearly used in an erotic context, have supported the assumption that symplegmata were probably sculptural compositions involving more than one person in an entangled, probably active pose, erotic in theme. The attribution of any of these groups of wrestling satyrs and nymphs or H. to Kephisodotos or Heliodoros must remain highly speculative.

ROMAN

63. Gem, carnelian. Munich, Münzslg. A 1952. - AGD I 3, no. 2303 pl. 204; Kuthmann, H., MJBK 9/10, 1958/59, 429 pl. 2, 5. - 1st-2nd cent. A.D. - Since H. here is shown from the back, the scene is identified as H. wrestling with satyr on the basis of similarities in pose to the sculptural examples listed below.

63a) Terracotta sealing. From Cyrene. - Maddoli, G., ASAtene 41/42, 1963/64, 63-64. 89 no. 328 pl. 20. - Early 2nd cent. A.D. - Shows back view of H.

63c) Mosaic pavement. Antakya, Hatay Mus. 840. From Daphne, House of the Boat of Psyche. - Stillwell, R., Antioch-on-the-Orontes II (1938) 185 no. 49 pl. 37; Levi, Antioch 183-185 figs. 39a. 69 pl. 40. - 3rd cent. A.D. - Two panels from this mosaic pavement of a colonnade partially preserve front and back views of what appears to be this sculptural type. The Satyr's skin is a deep yellow, H.'s is white.

Bronze figurines

63v) Bonn, Akad. Kunstmus. C 637. - Boardman/La Rocca, o.c. 63h, 150, with fig. on p. 151; Antiken aus dem Akademischen Kunstmuseum (1971) 32 no. 28 pl. 19. - Small replica of H. and Aggressive Satyr group measures 0.05 m. Erect phallus of Satyr preserved here.

63w) Prague, Mus. - Anticke Umeni: v Ceskoslovenskych Sbirkach (1979) 70 no. 270. - Miniature replica of H. and Aggressive Satyr type.

b) Hermaphroditos as aggressor

Twelve replicas have been recognized of another sculptural group with wrestling H. and satyr, but here, H. is the aggressor. Seated on a rock, facing to its r., H.'s lower limbs are partially draped, erect phallus exposed. With the l. hand H. grasps a small bearded satyr's r. hand, twisting his r. arm behind his head. With both legs H. pinions the satyr's r. leg at the thigh. The tangling of limbs once again provides support for legs that extend freely into space. The plinth in this composition is generally decorated with an assortment of bucolic accoutrements: cymbals, lagobolon, Pan pipes, goat skin, and in some examples, carved at the base of H.'s rocky seat, a rabbit crouching in a hollow surmounted by an eagle in heraldic pose. One example substitutes for this pair a fighting snake and lizard. In addition to the sculptures, at least eight examples of a very similar motif have been collected among relief medallions from Calenian cups dating to the mid-2nd cent. B.C. In these scenes some variation in pose can be noted: the Satyr's l. arm extends in front of H.'s body, with H. grabbing the Satyr's l. hand with its l. In the background to the r. of the figures is a small draped and bearded statue of Priapus(?) holding torch or thyrus, on a round, profiled base. The details of H.'s legs and drapery over its seat are not clear, but the satyr's l. leg does appear to be engaged, with his weight upon the free r. leg. Whether or not these relief scenes inspired the later three-dimensional works, or whether the medallions and the Roman works drew on a common Hellenistic sculptural prototype remains unclear, but what is more certain is that by the mid-2nd cent. B.C., H. in this struggling pose was well established, at least in the repertoire of Campanian relief vessels.

Sculpture in the round, marble

64d)* Rome, Torlonia Mus. 157. From Rome. – Gasparri, o.c. 64c, 175 no. 157; Visconti, o.c. 64c, 86–87 no. 157; Marconi 253. – All of satyr restored except for l. leg and r. foot; lower half of H.'s body also is restoration. Plinth lacks eagle.

64e) Berlin (DDR), Staatl. Mus. SK 195. From Rome. – Licht, H., Sittengeschichte Griechenlands II, 96; Beschreibung der antiken Skulpturen (1891) 83–84 no. 195 fig. 3; Marconi 253. – Has turtle on plinth.

64g) Algiers, Mus. From Cherchel. – Manderscheid, o.c. 64f, 127 no. 521 pl. 50; Leglay, M., La sculpture antique du Mus. Stéphane Gsell (1957) 29–32. – 2nd–1st cent. B.C. – Fr. group preserves seated H., lower torso to knees of struggling satyr; H. lacks head, r. arm; eagle and snake on plinth.

64h) Cherchel, Mus. From Cherchel. – Manderscheid, o.c. 64f, 25 with n. 256; Gauckler, P., Mus. de Cherchel (1895) 124. – 2nd–1st cent. B.C. – Gauckler mentions fragments of yet another Aggressive H. and Satyr group in the Mus. at Cherchel. These he assumed were also found in the West Baths along with 64f–g, and proposed a fourth group as part of the decoration of a single area in the bath. Manderscheid points out however that the findspot of these pieces is unknown and questions the validity of postulating a fourth group.

64i) Tunis, Bardo. From Carthage. – Du Coudray la Blanchère, R. Gauckler, P., Cat. du Mus. Alaoui (1897) 49 no. 17. – Mutilated fr. of the group.

64j) Nicosia, Cyprus Mus. From Salamis. – Karageorghis, V., Sculptures from Salamis I (1964) 29–30 no. 21; Dikaio, P., A Guide to the Cyprus Museum

(1961) 197 no. 8. – Torso of H. sits on plinth with relief of snake biting lizard.

C. Pan

Some scenes involve H. and Pan instead of satyrs, although there are not nearly as many representatives of these types. Most familiar are the wall paintings from the House of the Dioscuri and the House of the Vettii in Pompeii (66. 67) where a venerable motif is reworked; Pan lifts the drapery from what he thinks is a sleeping nymph and is greeted by the sight of H.'s male genitals and beckoning gesture; a surprise for both Pan and perhaps the viewer as well.

Wall paintings

65. Naples, Mus. Naz. 9264. From Pompeii VI 9, 2 (13) (House of Meleager). – Grant, o.c. 63b, 147; Schefold, WP 112; Helbig, Wandgemälde no. 1371 pl. 13. – Vespasianic. – H. leans to l. against pillar holding edge of drapery in upraised r. hand, revealing female breasts and male genitals. Small Pan to H.'s l., in foreground moves to his l., looking back at H. and gesturing with both hands held up, palms out.

66. Naples, Mus. Naz. 27700. From Pompeii VI 9, 6, atrium (37) (House of the Dioscuri). – Le Collezioni, o.c. 63b, 160 no. 265; Kraus, T., Pompeii and Herculaneum (1975) fig. 276; Schefold WP 116. – IVth Style. – Reclining H. supporting body on l. arm grasps Pan's l. arm who grasps an edge of H.'s mantle, pulling it away to expose the male genitals. Pan turns his head away to r. but gestures back toward H. with l. hand held up, palm facing H.

67. Pompeii VI 15, 1 (p) (House of the Vettii), in situ. – Schefold, WP 145; MonAnt 8, 1898, 307 fig. 32. – H. reclines, resting l. arm on tambourine, looks back to l. and holds out edge of drapery above head with r. hand. Pan to H.'s r. pulls away drapery from H.'s r. leg and torso, gesturing with his l. hand, held up, with palm toward H.

Marble figurine

68. Florence, Uff. 309. – Mansuelli, SculptUff I 157 no. 129. – Pan completely restored except for his r. arm where it touches H.'s l. side, and a small portion of the r. hoof; additional restorations to H.'s r. hand and the section of rock on which it rests l. arm, both feet and penis. Head ancient, but does not belong. Modern base supports plinth. H. sits in the pose of a nymph or muse, crossing l. leg in front of r., and turns to its l. to fend off Pan with the upraised l. arm. So little of the antique Pan remains that it is difficult to be sure exactly how the two figures interacted.

D. Silenus

H. and Silenus appear together chiefly in Pompeian wall paintings, and their relationship, along with the tenor and mood of these works is markedly different from the torsional, active compositions described above. Silenus here is bearded, balding and overweight, in contrast with the hirsute, yet sinewy creatures who wrestle with H. in the sculptural groups. The two characters in these paintings appear to have reached an accord of some kind, and it is perhaps worth keeping in mind the brief dialogue of Lukianos between H. and Silenus (see Literary Sources). Perhaps the epigram and the paintings echo some common tradition of a relationship between these two figures.

Wall paintings

69.* Naples, Mus. Naz. 27875. – Pompeii IX 1, 22 (House of Epidius Sabinus). – IVth Style. – Le Collezioni, o.c. 63b, 160 no. 261; Il Gabinetto segreto, o.c. 63b, 15; Schefold WP 237. – IVth Style. – H. with erect phallus, seated, pulls back edge of drapery exposing torso; grasps beard of draped Silenus behind with l. hand. Silenus grips H.'s l. wrist, and extends r. arm. To r. stands maenad holding kantharos in r. hand, thyrsus and tympanum in l.

70.* Pompeii VI 15, 1 (q) (House of the Vettii), in situ. – Schefold, WP 149; Rizzo, PER pl. 117. – IVth Style. – H. seated, wearing necklace, holds out edge of mantle in r. hand, exposing breasts and male genitals, and looks back to l. at draped Silenus who stands behind with r. hand outstretched, grasping H.'s l. wrist with his l. hand. In background to l. of H., thyrsus, to r., tree.

71. From Pompeii V 1, 26 (t) (House of Caecilius Iucundus), now destroyed. – Schefold, WP 68. – IVth Style. – H. standing, weight on r. leg, l. leg bent leans with l. arm against r. shoulder of Silenus wearing mantle and holding tambourine.

E. Pan and Silenus

F. Eros/Erotes

Gems

73.* Carnelian. Vienna, Kunsthist. Mus. IX B 1346. – AGOe I no. 223 pl. 38. – 3rd quarter 1st cent. B.C. – H. reclines on rocky ledge draped with fabric, one arm supports head, the other extended at side. Eros holding bow stands behind, grasps H.'s arm. Beside, tree with bird on branch and Pan pipes hanging from another branch.

73a) Sardonyx. Paris, Cab. Méd. 272. – Babelon, BiblNatCamées no. 48 pl. 7. – H. reclines supporting head on hand, surrounded by three erotes; tree in background.

73b) Glass. London, BM. – Walters, BMGems no. 3878. – H. reclines, supporting head on one hand, drapery over leg, surrounded by three erotes.

73c) Sardonyx. Paris, Cab. Méd. – Babelon, Bibl-

NatCamées no. 49 pl. 7. – H. reclines, head resting on one hand, flanked by two Erotes. Tree in background.

73d)* Onyx. London, BM. – Walters, BMGems no. 3481 pl. 34; Furtwängler, AG II 262 pl. 57, 23. – H. reclining on rock supports head with one hand. Eros in front holds cithara, another behind plays syrinx, a third holds a fan. In background a tree.

73e) Sardonyx. London, BM. – Walters, BMGems 1535 pl. 20. – Imperial. – H. reclines on animal skin, rests head on hand. The other arm extends along side, hand grasping edge of fabric. In front, Eros with cithara, two more behind, one holds a fan, the other plays syrinx. Tree in background.

Relief

74. Marble panel. Rome, Pal. Colonna. – Wrede, H., «Zu Antinous, Hermaphrodit und Odysseus», Boreas 9, 1986, 131 pl. 17, 3; Sampson, J., BSR 42, 1974, 30 no. 15; BrBr 628a; Schreiber, HR pl. 15. – H. in center of panel puts weight on l. leg, flexes r.; wears short veil over centrally parted hair pulled back, with some long locks escaping onto the shoulders. H. wears mantle draped over both arms and fastened on l. shoulder with large button, r. breast partially and l. breast fully exposed. In l. arm, H. supports baby Eros who crowns bearded herm to l. H. rests r. arm against pillar supporting figurine of Artemis.

Marble figurines

75. Rome, Cap. Mus. From Tor Marancia? – Delcourt 21–23 pl. 1; Stuart Jones, SculptMusCap 181 no. 109a pl. 42. – So-called H. Chablais rests weight on l. leg, with r. drawn back and to side, wears mantle draped across chest and l. shoulder revealing l. breast; raises garment to expose male genitals, and cradles small Eros in gathered folds of drapery.

75a) From Pompeii. – Neudecker, o.c. 63f, 179–180 no. 33.7; Paribeni, R., NSc 1902, 576 fig. 4. – H. stands frontal on base. Mantle draped over r. shoulder slips down on l. arm to reveal female breast; drapery hanging over r. arm uncovers male genitals; H. supports small Eros on its l. arm, wears short veil.

G. Infants

76. Marble. Liverpool, Walker Art Gall. – Howard, S., «Henry Blundell's «Sleeping Venus», ArtQ 31, 1968, 405–420; Ashmole, B., A Cat. the Ancient Marbles at Ince Blundell Hall (1929) 4 no. 25 pl. 24. – Sleeping (now) female rests on back, wreathed head fallen back, lips slightly parted; l. arm resting against thigh, relaxed r. arm extends out above plinth. Drapery covers lower legs; upper body nude. Bracelet worn on upper l. arm. Hair with central part, drawn back; a wreath worn on the back of the head. Original state of this work is known from a drawing in the Towneley coll. and from an entry written by Henry Blundell in the cat. of his coll. published in 1809 (Engravings and Etchings of Sepulchral Monuments... in the Coll. of Henry Blundell Esq., at Ince, pl. 41, no. 531). This sculpture was originally of H. nursing a baby at its l. breast, with two more infants supported against its r. side on folds of drapery. Sometime probably between 1804 and 1809, the babies and male genitals were removed, producing, according to Blundell «a sleeping Venus and as pleasing a figure as any in this collection.» Similar in pose to 59.

H. Dionysiac companions

77. (= Eros/Amor, Cupido 675 with bibl.) Wall painting. Pompeii VIII 4, 4 [28]. – Schefold, VergP 171 pl. 171, 3. – IVth Style. – The large central figure of H. dominates this scene filled with a variety of Dionysiac characters. H. nude except for drapery over l. arm and across l. knee, stands with weight on r. leg, l. leg bent and brought forward, r. foot resting on edge of the platform upon which all the figures stand. H. rests its l. elbow against the r. shoulder of a small Silenus playing the cithara. Between H. and Silenus Eros plays the double pipes. To H.'s r., stands a maenad holding thyrsus; in front of her a small Pan moving to his r. looks back at H.

78.* Small bronze group. Paris, Louvre Br 788 (MNC 1335). – de Ridder, BrLouvre I no. 788 pl. 54. – H. with draped hips, bared female breasts and male genitals rests l. arm on head of herm, r. hand placed on head of small male(?) or H.(?) holding Pan pipes(?).

I. Women

79. Mosaic pavement. Timgad, Mus. 71. From Timgad, House of the Hermaphrodite. – Germain, S., Les mosaïques de Timgad (1969) 67–68 Nr. 82 pl. 30; InvMos III 179; Ballu, A., Les ruines de Timgad II (1903) 92–94. – Fr. panel with the remains of three standing figures. Central one lacks head and the portion with the genitals. This figure has been identified as H. on the basis of pose. Figure with heavy green mantle over sleeved, square necked garment with fringed edge raises front of skirt in anasyromenos gesture; stands on low plinth. A female attendant(?) flanks H. on either side.

VI. Uncertain identifications

81. Gem, glass. Munich, Münzslg. A 2880. – AGDI 3, no. 3501 pl. 329. – Roman Imperial. – Nude

82. (= Ares/Mars 512 with bibl.) Relief, stone statue base. Bourges, Mus. des Antiquaires du Centre. From Bourges. The front of the base bears an inscription. On the sides, reliefs of nude, seated H.(?) or female, Eros flies toward the figure. Surface of the relief is so worn that positive identification of seated figure as H. is difficult.

83. Marble sarcophagus. Pisa, Camposanto B 4 est. – Gabba, E., in Arias et al., o. c. 14b, 117–119 figs. 122–125. – A.D. 120–125. – Garland sarcophagus with semidraped figure reclining on rocky ledge; drapery reveals male genitals, but female breasts are not evident; Pan stands, gesturing, to the r. Pose and companion are appropriate for Dionysos as well as H.

VII. Incorrect identifications

85. Gem, agate. Mainz, RGZM O.12703. – Depert-Lippitz, B., Röm. Goldschmuck im RGZM (1985) no. 185. – Mid 1st cent. B.C. – Nude figure reclines on rocky ledge. Above, bunch of grapes. Male, not H.

86. Silver spoon. Cleveland, Mus. of Art 1964.39. From N. Syria? – Weitzmann, Spirituality 336–337 no. 316. – 4th cent. A.D. – Engraved, gilded figure of youth on interior of spoon; although pectorals are engraved in a full, fleshy manner, this is probably a young male and not H. Holds shaft of grain in l. hand; crowns himself with r. hand.

90. Marble sarcophagus (Attic). Rome, Mus. Cap. 1884. – Koch/Sichtermann, RömSark 416; SarkRel IV 1, no. 10 pl. 16, 3. – 2nd quarter 3rd cent. A.D. – Corner figure, nude, dancing(?); damaged face, chest, groin. Identified as H.; trace of male testicles remains, but chest, despite breaks, appears to be male, even though hair is pulled back from face and fastened in a knot at nape of neck. Not clearly H., unless conventions for rendering at this fairly late period are considerably different from earlier examples. It should be noted that the figure at the opposite front corner is elderly and bearded, and clearly male, a chronological contrast to the very youthful, almost certainly male figure at the «beginning» of the frieze.

COMMENTARY

Representations of H. occur in large and small scale stone sculpture and reliefs, in marble, bronze and terracotta figurines, wall paintings, in a few mosaics and on gems. The distribution of these objects ranges from points in Italy, Austria, France and England to Greece, Cyprus, Asia Minor and North Africa. According to literary and epigraphical evidence, images of H. may have existed in Greece in the 4th cent. B.C., and in fact, the earliest example securely dated is a fragmentary mould for a figurine of H. (36), from the so-called Coroplasts' Dump in the Athenian Agora. This deposit is now dated to the last quarter of the 4th cent. B.C. (Thompson, H. A./Thompson, D. B., Hellenistic Pottery and Terracottas [1987] 184). The mould, in fresh condition, was apparently pressed carelessly against its model, and may have been intended for study purposes, according to D. B. Thompson. At any rate the existence of the mould presupposes both a prototype and a series of figurines, as well as a demand for such renderings of H. already in the 4th cent. B.C. Third cent. evidence is scarce but a recently excavated grave dating to the late 3rd, early 2nd cent. B.C. in Thessalonike (19) contained a terracotta figurine of H., and a small marble figure from Kos (27) has been dated to the 3rd cent. B.C. In the 2nd cent. B.C. the evidence is much richer, and includes marble relief plaques and figurines on Delos (30, 31), votive terracottas from two sites in Southern Italy (20, 40), a group of Calenian relief ware vessels (64a–b), and marble sculptures on Kos (29) and from Pergamon (17). The latest well dated works are the mosaic panels from the House of the Boat of Psyche at Daphne near Antioch (63) and the mosaic floor from Timgad (79) both dated in the 3rd cent. A.D. In addition, Christodoros mentions a bronze H. still decorating the Baths of Zeuxippos in Constantinople sometime before A.D. 532 (3), when the complex burned, but when this figure was made we have no way of knowing.

Ancient testimonia, an inscription, and some find-spots indicate that images of H. were appropriately placed in gymnasia, baths, theaters and domestic settings. That terracotta figurines were used as votives in Hellenistic deposits is conclusively demonstrated by those found at Paestum and Lokroi (19, 40), and such figurines were deposited as grave goods in Hellenistic burials on the Greek mainland. Possibly some of the many other figurines in marble, terracotta, and bronze served the same functions. An unfinished marble figurine found at the Athenian Agora (33), along with the terracotta mould mentioned above suggests a local supply and demand for such objects in the Hellenistic or early Roman period.

Common to all representations of H. is the clear delineation of female breasts and male genitals, although female genitals were sometimes indicated as well. The main criterion, in fact, for identifying images of H. should be the unambiguous rendering of dual sexual features. If there is uncertainty in this regard, the figure should probably be discounted as a representation of H. (see Sections VI and VII for uncertain and incorrect identifications). As for body type, H. usually is shown with the fleshy physique and undeveloped musculature of a young boy, sometimes with a prepubescent fold of flesh just above the genitals. However H. occasionally appears with a distinctly female body to which male genitals have been appended. In these works, notably the Sleeping H. (56) and the group with H. and Aggressive Satyr (63), H.'s body, from certain angles, is indistinguishable from that of a woman's, and this visual bifurcation appears to be an intentional effect in the compositions.

Representations of certain other divinities, Attis and Eros, for example, are sometimes termed hermaphroditic because of the markedly feminine rendering of body and attributes. The pectorals, for example, may be fleshy and developed, the physique generally proportioned and delineated like that of a woman. But as has already been remarked in this series (→ Eros, pp. 940–941) it is unlikely that Greek or Roman artists would have confused H. with Eros or Attis, or created a synthetic personage. Rather, the iconographic repertoire for these figures developed certain traits and features based on their characteristic youth. Eros, of course, often appears as an infant or toddler; he is the child of Aphrodite and this connection was expressed through his appearance. Thus, Eros often looks effeminate and physically immature, wearing amulets or jewelry, his mother's attributes. And Attis too is a very young figure, often depicted as a youth or child, so his physique as well reflects the artistic conventions for rendering immature physical development, rather than hermaphroditic traits (→ Attis 145, 338*, 339*). Images of the Egyptian god Bes, however, occasionally demonstrate what may more properly be termed an hermaphroditic appearance. A figurine of this god in Hildesheim (Pel.-Mus. 248, Jesi, F., «Bes Bifronte e Bes Ermafrodito», Aegyptus 43, 1963,

H.'s costume is most elaborate in the anasyromenos representations, where chiton, mantle, and the occasional feminine headdress are worn. Elsewhere the garment, partially or entirely removed, appears to be a mantle. Two anasyromenos figures, a large sculpture now at the Torlonia Museum in Rome (43), and H. in a fragmentary mosaic pavement in Timgad (79), wear heavy fringed drapery. H.'s hairstyle is consistently similar to that of Aphrodite, Apollo and Dionysos, with central parting, long locks drawn back and sometimes rolled under, away from the brow, and fastened in a bun at the nape of the neck, a stray lock or two escaping onto the shoulders. H. of Sleeping Type has the most elaborate coiffure of all. The combination of central braid, sometimes braided fillet, and jewelled fastener has no real parallel, but some of the individual elements can be recognized from other hairstyles. Children and youths were often depicted wearing their long front hair braided, and the similarity was observed long ago between the arrangement of the Sleeping H.'s hair and that of the numerous sculptures of sleeping Erotes (Ashmole, B., JHS 42, 1922, 244-246).

Representations of H. form two distinct compositional groups. One includes the many anasyromenos figures (III B), where H.'s identity is clear at a single glance, and where details of costume and gesture contribute to this immediate recognition. The second group includes the more torsional figures, where the position of viewer and sculpture alike appears to have been carefully manipulated. The sleeping H. (56) and groups where H. struggles with a satyr (63) are the main representatives of this type, but kallipygos bronzes and dancing H. on Neo-Attic reliefs (II B) also exploit the torsion of the body to express in two, as well as three dimensions, H.'s special attributes.

It appears to be the case that in Italy at least, both anasyromenos (III B) figures and one of the more complex group compositions, Aggressive H. and satyr, were roughly contemporary (64a-b). In Greece, a similar variety of types also can be documented during the 2nd cent. B.C.: Anasyromenos figurines and reliefs at Delos (30. 31), the figurines from Kos (29) and Thessalonike (18), and whatever form, according to an inscription (4), ornamented an Athenian gymnasium.

There apparently are no ancient works that clearly depict the story of H. and Salmacis told by Ovid, although in the Renaissance and in later periods, the scene was rendered in a variety of media. Plin. described a sequence of developments in the popular perception of hermaphrodites in nature; first they were feared and considered portents, but in his day they were viewed as a source of amusement. But that the divinity H. could have been perceived with humor already by the 2nd cent. B.C. seems likely, to judge from the Hellenistic relief ware scenes (64a-b) where H. appears to be winning an amorous wrestling match.

H.'s close iconographical connection with Aphrodite and Priapus suggests a shared meaning and function with these divinities as well; the exposed, often erect phallus a proponent of fertility, the combination of sexual features embodying a higher, more complete form of existence, rather than an abnormal one. The wrestling groups may also have conveyed a message about the potential of unrestricted nature.

That H. was considered a divinity with powers of some kind is supported by the activities of Theophr.'s Superstitious Man, and by the modest votive base found at Vari. But bisexual creatures were also perceived by the Greeks and Romans to have a dangerous side. Agdistis, in the accounts of Paus. and Arnob., is destructive and violent, and the infants in Rome identified as androgynous were feared and destroyed from the late third to the early first cent. B.C.

H. may have had also funerary connections; the strongest evidence is the deposition of terracotta figurines in Greek and Alexandrian graves (19. 26), the appearance of H. kallipygos on a Gallo-Roman funeral monument (14e), and perhaps by the popularity of sleeping types, since the sleepers Endymion and Ariadne played an important role in the repertoire of Roman funerary iconography. A fragmentary version of the Sleeping H. type actually holds pomegranates or poppies (55h). It is probably significant that the terracotta figurine of a woman sleeping in virtually the same pose as H. of Sleeping type was found in a Tarentine grave. But on Attic and Roman sarcophagi, where we might expect to find confirmation and illumination of H.'s role in funerary iconography, the evidence is inconclusive. Several figures previously identified as H. dancing or reclining in reliefs decorating sarcophagi are probably male figures instead (90. 91). Only one, reclining and observed by Pan on a sarcophagus in Pisa might be H. (79).

Hermaphroditos the divinity and Hermaphrodites in nature

Diod. (4, 6, 5) articulates the distinction between H. the divinity and humans with both male and female genitals, considered by some people to be monsters. Elsewhere (32, 10, 2-9) Diod. describes the case of a woman called Heraïs who suddenly sprouts male genitals. At first she keeps this condition a secret, but when her husband brings her to trial for refusing to sleep with him, Heraïs lifts her dress to reveal her altered state, a literary counterpart of the numerous sculptures and figurines of H. anasyromenos (Section II B). These sexual alterations, and similar cases discussed by Plin. and Phlegon (mir. 6 = FGrH 256 F 36, p. 1178-1179), were considered portents by Livy and Julius Obsequens, who also reported a series of androgynous births occurring in Rome and elsewhere in Italy between 209 and 92 B.C. At least sixteen of these monstra were identified and drowned at sea in the course of rituals that required joint action by both the Roman decemviri and the haruspices (MacBain, R., Prodigy and Expiation: A Study in Religion and Politics in Republican Rome [1982] 126-135). Plin. probably alludes to these expiations at nat. 7, 34: «Gignuntur et utriusque sexus quos hermaphroditos vocamus, olim androgynos vocatos et in prodigiis habitos, nunc vero in deliciis.» It should be noted that these expiatory periods occurred during a time when many images of H. the divinity were produced, both in Greece and Italy.

Androgynos

Plin., as mentioned above, suggests that the term ἀνδρόγυνος was in use before ἐρμαφρόδιτος. While this chronology may not be supported by the textual and inscriptional evidence, it is clear that in its adjectival forms the term could be used to describe a creature possessing elements of both sexes, in nature and in an extended sense.

The most familiar use of ἀνδρόγυνος to mean a combination of the sexes occurs in the speech of Aristophanes in Plato's symposium (189e-193a), where the first human beings are globe-shaped ἀνδρόγυνα, later cut in half.

Elsewhere, the epithet ἀνδρόγυνος indicates the debilitation of masculine virility rather than sexual completeness, as in Hdt. (4, 67) where the Scythian Enarees are described as οἱ ἀνδρόγυνοι (cf. 1, 105 for the ἡλέια νοσος, i. e. impotence, of Scythians, as punishment of Aphrodite).

H. is not the only bisexual creature in the Greek mythological tradition. Playing a central role in Orphic cosmology is the being variously called Phanes, Protogonos, Bromios, Zeus, and Eros. → Phanes, possessing both male and female genitals, by himself produces Night and several other divinities (West, M. L., The Orphic Poems [1983] 70. 90. 202-220).

Another divinity with a bisexual aspect should be considered here, the Phrygian Agdistis, better known as a female deity akin to Cybele. But in an aetiological myth of Attis (→ Attis, p. 22) presented in its fullest form by the Christian Apologist Arnobius (late 3rd-early 4th cent. A.D.) and in Paus.' abbreviated version, Agdistis' earlier, bisexual nature is described. According to Arnob., Jupiter tries to seduce the Phrygian mountain Agdus as she lies asleep in the form of a woman. Unsuccessful in the attempt, Jupiter lets sperm fall on the mountain itself, and after a ten month gestation, Agdus produces a wild, androgynous offspring called Agdistis. Because Agdistis is so destructive, the gods decide to take action and Liber fills with wine the spring from which Agdistis always drinks. Later the drunken hermaphrodite falls asleep beside the spring, Liber attaches the creature's genitals to a tree, and when Agdistis awakens he emasculates himself. Attis, in this account, is produced from the seeds of a tree that grows up from Agdistis' blood. But Agdistis' association with Attis does not end with this catastrophe. Agdistis subsequently assumes a female persona similar to that of the Mater Magna and after the death of Attis establishes a cult in his memory. Epigraphical evidence for cults of Agdistis is found not only at Phrygian sites, but also at the Piraeus in Athens, where an inscribed relief stele is dedicated to Agdistis and Attis and bears a representation of Agdistis the female deity (→ Attis 416*). No images of the bisexual Agdistis have been identified, but it is possible that some form of this story might have been known in Greece as early as the 4th cent. B.C., since Arnob. says that for his Phrygian material he drew on the work of Timotheus, a Eumolpid priest and exegete at Eleusis (cf. FGrH 800 F 8c), active around 300 B.C., and from other sources we know that this man was considered an authority on religions and oracles (on Agdistis: Garland, R., The Piraeus [1987] 105; Vermaseren, M. J., CCA I: Asia Minor [1987] Nrs. 84. 148. 149. 167. 489. 761. 777. 888; Meslin, M., «Agdistis ou androgynie malséante», in Hommages à Maarten J. Vermaseren II [1978] 765-776; Vermaseren, M. J., Cybele and Attis [1977] 35. 90-91 pl. 24; Roussel, P., «Un sanctuaire d'Agdistis à Rhamnonte», REA 32 [1930] 5-8).

HERMES

(Ἑρμῆς, -ος en ion.-att., dans l'épopée Ἑρμείης ou Ἑρμείας, Ἑρμῆς en béot., Ἑρμῆν, -ἄνος en lacon. et arc., Ἑρμαος en thess., pour d'autres graphies et formes dialectales cf. Chantraine s. v. Ἑρμῆς. Nom commun, le mot Ἑρμῆς, plur. Ἑρμαῖ, lat. herma, -ae, désigne un pilier hermaïque: cf. infra, Cat. II; étr. → Turms, lat. → Mercurius) Fils de → Zeus et de la Nymphé arcadienne → Maia, il est l'un des douze Olympiens (→ Dodekathēoi), mais apparaît dès le II<sup>e</sup> millénaire comme une divinité du panthéon mycénien.

TABLETTES MYCÉNIENNES EN LINÉAIRE B

La forme e-ma-a2 revient cinq fois dans les tablettes en linéaire B: trois fois à Pylos (PY Nn 1357, 1; PY Tn 316 v. 7; PY Un 219, 8), une fois à Cnossos (KN D 411), une fois à Thèbes (TH Of 31), sans qu'il s'agisse nécessairement du théonyme dans tous les cas. Mais c'est bien le dieu H. qui figure sur la tablette de Pylos Tn 316 (Ventris, M./Chadwick, J., Documents in Mycenaean Greek 2 [1973] n° 172), calendrier religieux où est mentionné l'envoi à diverses divinités de vases en or, d'hommes ou de femmes. A la ligne 7 du verso le groupe e-ma-a2 a-re-ja (si A-re-ja n'est pas un toponyme) pourrait indiquer un lien entre H. et → Ares. De même à Thèbes (Chadwick, J., The Thebes Tablets II [1975] 91.105) H. bénéficie d'allocations de laine, comme d'autres divinités et comme le personnel des sanctuaires. A Cnossos enfin c'est probablement au dieu H. (plutôt qu'à un propriétaire de ce nom) qu'appartient le troupeau sacré enregistré par la tablette. H. est moins fréquemment mentionné dans les textes en linéaire B que → Poseidon ou → Potnia, mais aussi souvent que Zeus ou → Hera et plus qu'→ Artemis ou que → Dionysos. Sa présence dans trois archives palatiales suggère qu'il avait déjà le statut d'un dieu panhellénique. Dans le sanctuaire crétois de Katô-Symi, qu'H. partage avec → Aphrodite et où des pinakes du

SOURCES LITTÉRAIRES

Pas plus que d'autres divinités grecques H. ne présente l'unité psychologique et morale d'une «personne»: beaucoup plus que d'autres, il se caractérise par une variété de fonctions dont on peut rechercher le dénominateur commun (on ne citera que pour mémoire le dieu météorologique de Scherer; pour Kahn 165-186, H. est le dieu de la «médiation»), mais qui se laissent difficilement réduire à une définition tout à fait cohérente. Protéiforme par nature, l'H. homérique est aussi le produit d'une histoire millénaire. Les traits et les fonctions que le portrait littéraire fait ressortir sont les uns à l'origine d'une importante iconographie, les autres iconographiquement moins féconds ou stériles. On soulignera, pour les expliquer dans la mesure du possible, ces rencontres et ces discordances entre écrivains et imagiers. Mais le foisonnement des images hermaïques débordent de beaucoup la tradition écrite. L'articulation du catalogue mettra en évidence la diversité des interventions et l'omniprésence d'H. dans tous les cycles héroïques et divins de la mythologie et dans de très nombreuses circonstances de la vie des Grecs.

1. Le récit des enfances

L'Hymne homérique à H. (h. Merc.), composé probablement par un poète béotien dans le dernier tiers du VI<sup>e</sup> s. (avec une «suite» aux v. 513-518), donne des enfances un récit dont on a relevé les contradictions (Humbert, J., Homère, Hymnes, éd. Les Belles-Lettres [1936] 103-115). Apollodore (Apollod. bibl. 3 [112-114] 10, 2) connaît un état plus rationnel de la légende qui organise autrement les épisodes et occulte, p. ex., les fantastiques femmes-abeilles (h. Merc. 552-564). Les imagiers non plus ne se sont pas intéressés à l'oracle de Thies ni à un H. oraculaire. D'autres évocations du texte ont, en revanche, inspiré les peintres, parfois les sculpteurs: l'enfant faussement endormi dans la grotte du mont Cyllène (241-242); l'inventeur de la lyre et de la syrinx (Cat. VII A); le poète lyrique et le musicien pastoral (Cat. VII B-D); le magicien spécialiste des liens et des nœuds de l'épisode du gattilier, armé de la rhabdos merveilleuse; le maître du bétail, dieu des animaux en général (Cat. V); le guide «opulent et glorieux» (h. Merc. 461) dont la baguette «en or et à triple feuille» (h. Merc. 529-530) n'évoque guère le caducée du héraut (cf. infra p. 385). L'enfant de l'Hymne homérique se caractérise par des fonctions et des qualités qui sont constantes chez le dieu dans la poésie homérique toute entière.

L'épisode d'H. volant le bétail d'Apollon se retrouve également chez [Hes.?] frg. 256 Merkelbach/West; Alk. frg. 308 Voigt; Soph. Ichneutai, TrGF IV F 314.

2. Le dieu serviteur

Admis au rang des Olympiens (h. Merc. 313-394. 399-575), H. fait cependant figure de dieu subalterne, respectueusement aux ordres de Zeus (l. c. 395) dont il exécute les volontés et auquel il rend les services les plus divers (cf. Hom. Od. 5, 29). L'imagerie retient avec insistance cet aspect de sa personnalité. Des siècles après l'épopée, Lucien le montre besognant dès l'aube, balayeur de la salle de festin, échanton, messager, guide des morts, professeur d'éloquence, maître de palestre (Lukianos d. deor. 4 [24] 1-2). Chez Eschyle, cette subordination lui vaut le mépris de Prométhée (→Prometheus) (Aischyl. Prom. 941-942), mais chez Aristophane il est l'ami des hommes dont il prend le parti, au besoin contre les Immortels (Aristoph. Pax 361-425). La condition intermédiaire d'H., comparable à celle des héros (mais sans rien d'«héroïque»), a été soulignée par Brelich (357-360).

3. Le messager et le guide

Ces deux fonctions, souvent complémentaires, relèvent d'attributions majeures d'H. dans l'Iliade et dans l'Odyssée. L'ἄγγελος ne se distingue pas du κῆρυξ que Zeus pressent dans l'enfant qui comparait devant son tribunal (h. Merc. 331: παῖδα νέον γεγαῶτα, φῆν κῆρυκος ἔχοντα). Dans la suite des poèmes le messager intègre le héraut, mais dans l'imagerie le κῆρυξ est l'insigne quasi permanent d'H., qu'il agisse ou non en κῆρυξ; inversement, l'équipement vestimentaire d'H. (coiffure, chlamyde, himation court) caractérise les hérauts et il arrive même, dans l'épisode de Briséis, que Talthybios porte à son pétase les ailerons hermaïques (mosaïque de la Maison d'Aïôn à Antioche: →Briséis 5*). Dans l'épopée, et jusque dans l'art classique, H. partage ses fonctions avec →Iris, la «chienne d'Héra» (Kall. h. 4, 228-239), elle aussi rapide messagère.

Les épicleses d'H. mettent l'accent sur la célérité, la force, les bienfaits du messager dans l'accomplissement de ses missions: θοὸς ἄγγελος (Hom. h. 19, 29), εἰσιόνιος ἄγγελος ὤκως (Hom. h. Cer. 407), sans parler de l'énigmatique Ἀργεῖφόντης quelquefois qualifié de κρατὺς (h. Cer. 346. 377), que l'on a voulu expliquer par ἀργός au sens de ταχύς (Jessen, O., RE II 1 [1895] 703 s. v. «Argeiphontes»). Ailleurs ce sont les images du vent et de la mouette fendant les flots (Hom. Od. 5, 43-54) qui évoquent le dieu. Toutes ces qualités vantées par les poètes sont transcrites iconographiquement au moyen d'attitudes, de gestes, d'actions: courses sur terre et sur mer, fébrilité d'un personnage en mouvement ou sur le qui-vive, même quand son entourage observe le repos.

Guide par excellence (τοῖος πομπός, Il. 24, 153. 182; πομπός, Il. 24, 437. 439. 461), il est bien celui qui fait passer de dangereuses frontières (Kahn, L., «Hermès et la frontière ambiguë», Ktéma 4, 1979, 201-211), l'«ange» protecteur «qui aime au plus haut point à servir de compagnie à un mortel» (Il. 24, 334-335), selon le témoignage constant des textes et des images. Dans les Euménides, il est pour Oreste Ἑρμῆς Πομπάτος (Aischyl. Eum. 89-93). Notons pourtant que s'il est le dieu du nostos d'Ulysse (Od. 1, 84-87; 5, 29-31; 14, 435-436), l'iconographie homérique l'a rarement montré dans ce rôle. Absent d'épisodes dramatiques comme celui du Cyclope (→Kyklops, Kyklopes), il assiste le héros aux Enfers, mais n'intervient qu'une seule fois contre Circé (→Kirke) et sur un document tardif (585bis). Sa sollicitude se manifeste particulièrement à l'égard des enfants (H. pédophore, Cat. VIII A) et d'abord à l'égard de son propre fils →Pan qu'il enveloppe de fourrures pour le porter aux Immortels (Hom. h. 19, 42-43).

L'image du guide qui se laisse reconstruire, accompagnant le pas du voyageur, précédant ou menant l'attelage (Cat. VIII C) est d'une grande cohérence, mais elle se manifeste dans une multitude de registres: le pousseur de bétail (ἐλατῆρα βοῶν, h. Merc. 14) se fait passeur de frontières cosmiques. La fonction de psychopompe, illustrée aussi bien par l'iconographie des mythes que par celle des rites et des cultes funéraires, en est une ancienne et durable spécialisation. Des stèles thessaliennes sont inscrites ΕΡΜΑΟΥ ΧΘΟΝΙΟΥ (IG IX 2, 638, index; cf. Aischyl. Choeph. 1: Ἑρμῆ χθόνιου). La prairie d'asphodèles de la première νέκυια que traverse l'ombre d'Achille (Od. 11, 538-540), celle de la seconde νέκυια, «séjour des âmes», où H. fait descendre les prétendants (Od. 24, 13-14) est aussi la retraite où le brigand de l'Hymne conduit le troupeau d'Apollon (h. Merc. 221). L'H. armé de la ράβδος magique, maître des εἰδωλα, poussant devant lui les fantômes comme une nuée de chauves-souris (Od. 24, 1-14), conduisant des homoncles (h. Merc. 259), «seul messager accrédité auprès d'Hadès» (h. Merc. 572), est celui que les décorateurs de lécythes ont imaginé à la lecture d'Homère (Cat. IX F).

Un dernier texte confère leur portée aux fonctions décrites ici: celui de la transmission du sceptre des Attrides (Il. 2, 100-108). H., comme un maillon dynastique, le reçoit de Zeus pour le remettre à →Pelops. Nul autre que le dieu de la communication n'était mieux qualifié pour garantir la continuité du lien royal. Par un hapax plein de sens, lui-même qui règne sur le Cyllène (mais au début de l'Hymne [h. Merc. 2] son «règne» est simplement exprimé par le verbe μεδέω; également Alk. frg. 308 Voigt) porte pour la circonstance le titre de prince, généralement réservé à Zeus et à Apollon: Ἑρμῆας ἀναξ (Il. 2, 104). Il est possible que certaines images où H., au lieu de son costume de voyage, porte un somptueux manteau rappellent son occasionnelle royauté.

C'est lui que saluent les auteurs du second Hymne à H. (Hom. h. 18, 12), de l'Hymne à Hestia (Hom. h. 29, 8) et, dans l'Odyssée (8, 335), Apollon en personne: Ἑρμῆς χαριδότης, δώτωρ ἐάων, le Dispensateur de grâces et de biens, le dieu à la baguette d'opulence et de richesse (h. Merc. 529), représenté sans cesse et de cent façons par les imagiers. Cette richesse, pastorale à l'origine, est fondée sur la fécondité des troupeaux que multiplie le dieu de l'Arcadie «abondante en moutons», lui-même bouvier (h. Merc. 491-494) et berger, «tout dieu qu'il fût» (h. Merc. 314; h. 19, 32-33), amant de la Troyenne Polymélè (Il. 16, 180) à qui il donne un fils Eudôros, au nom tout aussi transparent. Chez Hésiode (Hes. theog. 444-447) il partage avec Hécate (→Hekate) le soin d'accroître le nombre des bœufs, des chèvres et des brebis. L'H. pastoral, chanté aussi par Simonide d'Amorgos (West IEG II frg. 20), représenté dès l'art archaïque par des séries nombreuses et variées (Cat. V) devient plus généralement le dieu de toute prospérité lorsque la richesse en pays grec revêt des modalités nouvelles. Le phallus du pilier hermaïque (Cat. II) continue de rappeler le pouvoir fécondant d'H., même quand son symbolisme d'apotropaion et de porte-bonheur garantit d'autres formes de réussite. Du reste le dieu à la bourse de l'iconographie romaine (→Mercurius) n'est-il pas préfiguré dans l'Hymne homérique qui fait d'H. le fondateur de l'échange (ἐπαμοιβῖμα ἔργα, h. Merc. 516-517), d'abord par le troc, plus tard par la monnaie? Sa lyre est estimée à cinquante vaches (h. Merc. 437) et il est chargé de remettre à Trôs des chevaux au pas fringant pour le prix de son fils Ganymède (→Ganymedes): Hom. h. Ven. 210-211; Il. 5, 265-267.

On ne s'étonnera pas que l'empire d'H. s'étende aux équidés, à ces chevaux et ces mules qu'il dirige pour Priam (Il. 24, 440-442; →Priamos) et qu'il attelle à son char (Il. 24, 690-691) ou qu'il dirige pour reconduire →Persephone (h. Cer. 377-379). Dans certaines scènes de départ (408-451) le guide fait office de palefrenier. Les vers 567-571 de l'h. Merc. lui accordent plus étrangement pouvoir sur les lions et les sangliers, ainsi que sur les chiens. L'imagerie n'a pas retenu ces associations, sauf pour les chiens dont la présence n'est pas surprenante auprès du dieu des bergers. La petite tête de sanglier en bronze, inscrite ΕΡΜΑΝΟΣ ΦΕΝΕΟΙ semble être l'ex-voto d'un chasseur au dieu du Cyllène (Jost 29. 448). L'image d'un Maître des fauves (Chittenden 1) renvoie peut-être, dans la poésie homérique, au parèdre d'une Πόρνια de l'Âge du Bronze (Pestalozza, U., L'éternel féminin dans la religion méditerranéenne [trad. fr. 1965] 16. 27. 31). Elle ne correspond plus à l'H. de la religion et de l'iconographie poliades. Un problème connexe est posé par les pouvoirs et les connaissances du dieu en matière de végétation. C'est une Nymphe du chêne qui lui donne un fils (Hom. h. 19, 33-37); il commande au gattilier (h. Merc. 409-413) et il livre à Ulysse le secret du μῶλυ contre les sortilèges de Circé (Od. 10, 287-306). L'imagerie a transmis, au moins en Crète, des figurations d'un H. lié aux arbres et aux plantes (Lembési n<sup>os</sup> A 21. A 58), invoqué sous le nom d'H. κεδρίτης. Mais par la suite rien ne révèle entre H. et la végétation un lien comparable à celui qui unit Déméter au blé, Dionysos à la vigne et au lierre. La légende de l'H. Poly-

5. Hermès l'industriel, le magicien, le pacifique

H. manifeste une personnalité à deux versants au clivage abrupt. Le dieu bienfaisant et amical est en même temps, et dès le jour de sa naissance, expert en ruses, dols et sortilèges. Les traditions littéraire et iconographique ont inégalement retenu cette image du dieu trompeur et voleur, «prince des brigands» (h. Merc. 292), patron et complice de mauvais garçons, protecteur d'Autolykos (I), le parangon des voleurs et des parjures (Od. 19, 395-396), πολύτροπος et πολύμητις comme Ulysse, son pendant humain.

A cette vision péjorative (αἰνολομήτης, ληϊστήρ, h. Merc. 14), vision franchement pessimiste d'un H. nocturne, «aux bienfaits rares», dans les derniers vers de la «suite» de l'Hymne (557), poètes et imagiers ont presque toujours préféré celles de l'espièglerie et de la mystification, de la bonne humeur sensible même dans les mauvais coups (cf. l'image de la fraude sacrificielle: 820). Il y avait à Chios un culte d'H. Κλέπτης (EpGr 1108); à Samos, quand on sacrifiait à H. Χαριδώτης (cf. Hom. h. 18, 12), on pouvait voler, détrousser (Plut. quaest. Graec. 303 d). Sur la route de Pellène on rencontrait un hermès d'H. Δόλιος toujours prêt à exaucer les prières des passants (Paus. 7, 27, 1)!

Dans ses inventions et ses interventions H. joue simultanément de la technique et de la magie. On le décrit (h. Merc. 24-51) et on le montre (312) fabricant de lyres et Ulysse se réclame de lui pour l'habileté manuelle (Od. 15, 319). Mais ses sandales qui évitent la fatigue et brouillent la piste sont θαυματὰ ἔργα (h. Merc. 79-86) et dans l'épisode de Circé, il engage un duel de sortilèges: le μῶλυ contre «la très longue baguette» de Circé (Od. 10, 293). Expert en liens et en nœuds, ce n'est pas lui qui craint les mailles du filet où → Hephaisstos a enfermé Aphrodite et Arès (Od. 8, 335-342), Arès que précisément il délivre de la jarre des Aloades (→ Aloadaï; cf. Il. 5, 385-391). Enfin, le feu prométhéen, qu'il semble inventer avant Prométhée (h. Merc. 111), est issu à la fois de gestes techniques et d'un miracle d'→ Hephaisstos, tout comme Pandora (→ Pandora) à qui H. confère la parole et un cœur artificieux (Hes. erg. 77-80).

Dieu de la bonne et de la mauvaise metis (Kahn 182), H. possède par corollaire une qualité que ne démentent presque jamais l'imagerie et les textes: celle de la non-violence. Par solidarité olympienne il est certes entraîné dans les Gigantomachies (Cat. XII A, → Gigantes), mais dans l'Iliade c'est le moins guerrier des dieux. Sans aucun souci de gloire militaire, il cède sans combattre devant → Leto (Il. 21, 498-501) et c'est lui qui l'empporte «par la sagesse et l'esprit» (Il. 20, 35) quand les Olympiens se divisent en camps partisans. L'épisode du meurtre d'Argos (qu'Homère semble ignorer malgré l'épiclese d'Argeiphontès), si bien représenté dans l'imagerie (Cat. XII B; → Io I), est de ce point de vue si aberrant que les mythographes ont apporté des corrections à la version majeure (cf. 852). Car les armes d'H. sont constamment la persuasion sans la force et parfois le charme de la musique qui apaise la colère d'Apollon (h. Merc. 447).

Après le partage des compétences avec Apollon et le renoncement à la lyre, H. invente la syrinx pour devenir le dieu de la musique agreste se mêlant aux danses des Nymphes (→ Nymphai) et des Charites (→ Charis, Charites), quelquefois en compagnie des Muses (→ Mousa, Mousai) et d'Apollon citharède (Hom. h. Ap. 194-202). Dans l'Œuf, le poème figuré de Simias de Rhodes (Legrand, Ph. E., Bucoliques grecs II [1927] 229-231), il exécute une danse solitaire. Musique, danse et amour sont des activités connexes dans les épopées et dans les hymnes homériques. Polymélès est une danseuse de la suite d'Artémis. En compagnie des Silènes, H. s'unit aux Nymphes «qui dansent gracieusement en chœur avec les Immortels» (Hom. h. Ven. 261-263), au fond des grottes comme l'avaient fait ses parents sur le mont Cyllène. Ces scènes bucoliques n'ont pas leurs pendants dans l'imagerie, mais elles expliquent les images de poursuite amoureuse fréquentes dans la peinture de vases attique (Cat. XIII). Dieu aux nombreuses conquêtes (cf. liste: Eitrem 774), plein d'affinités avec Aphrodite et → Eros, son pilier, rencontre de bon augure, se trouve sur le passage du cortège nuptial (103). Toutefois rien ne désigne H. comme une divinité du mariage. Il est l'amant ou l'époux passager, qu'il chasse pour son propre compte ou qu'il serve de rabatteur à Zeus. Dans l'Hymne à Aphrodite il enlève pour Anchise (→ Anchises) la déesse qui le séduit tant lui-même (h. Ven. 117-127; Od. 8, 335-342), comme il favorise sur la fresque de Vergina le rapt amoureux d'→ Hades (440).

7. Le barbu et le kouros

Quel est l'aspect d'H.? Dans la poésie homérique, ses qualités d'esprit et ses traits de caractère ressortent beaucoup plus clairement que son apparence physique et vestimentaire (sur ce dernier point cf. Commentaire). Pas plus qu'Iris il ne porte le caducée qui dans toute l'imagerie grecque sera son principal attribut. C'est la πάβδος qui le distingue. Il ne semble jamais tenir la μάστιγ du bouvier que lui remet Apollon (h. Merc. 497), mais il manie le fouet dans des scènes d'anodos (Cat. IX F) et pour faire tourner une toupie (Cat. XV). Les sandales ailées qui font partie de sa silhouette sont chez Homère belles, divines, en or, mais elles ne sont jamais expressément des πέδιλα πτερόεντα (première mention dans Ps.-Hes. sc. 220, pour l'équipement de Persée; vers 590-560 av. J.-C.). Point non plus de pétase, avec ou sans ailes. Tout se passe comme si les peintres de vases du haut archaïsme avaient construit l'image d'H., parfaitement formée dès la fin du VII<sup>e</sup> s. (Cat. III), à partir de traits poétiques (le dieu «ailé») et psychologiques (le dieu subtil, en perpétuel mouvement), mais aussi à partir du modèle du héros épique: un homme solide et raisonnable, d'âge mûr (comme Talhybios et Idée [→ Idaios] en Il. 7, 276), forcément barbu. Le ἄρνυξ que reconnaît Zeus dans l'enfant de l'h. Merc. (v. 331), texte postérieur aux plus anciennes représentations, est déjà l'H. des imagiers.

Le personnage à la barbe pointue qu'évoque Pollux (4, 138: σφηνοπώγων) est conforme à un type alors multiséculaire.

On rencontre pourtant dans l'art classique et hellénistique un H. juvénile qui ne l'était pas seulement devenu par un phénomène de mode et de style, par l'effet d'un rajeunissement sensible chez d'autres dieux, mais qui l'était par nature. H. n'est jamais décrit physiquement par Homère, si ce n'est quand il apparaît à un mortel. Il revêt alors la forme d'un kouros, d'un prince adolescent à la barbe naissante (Il. 24, 347-348) qui suscite l'admiration de Priam (ibid. 376-377) et qui souligne lui-même sa jeunesse (ibid. 433). L'épiphanie d'H. à Ulysse au pays de Circé est évoquée dans des termes quasi identiques (Od. 10, 277-279). Si le poète a choisi cette apparence pour son personnage, c'est parce que le charme de la jeunesse favorisait le succès de missions ponctuelles d'H., parce qu'elle correspondait aussi à une de ses fonctions essentielles (communiquer, plaire) et à une virtualité de sa nature (Robert, F., Homère [1950] 203). Les sculpteurs et les peintres des époques postérieures n'ont fait qu'exprimer à leur manière cette vigueur et cette grâce juvéniles de l'H. homérique. L'image du dieu des athlètes ne connaît cependant toute sa fortune que dans la Grèce des cités, à partir du V<sup>e</sup> s. Cet H.-kouros est celui des légendes et des rites de Tanagra: à sa fête, le plus beau des jeunes gens l'incarne dans le rôle de criophore. Quant à l'H. Promachos, c'est strigile au poing qu'il a conduit la jeunesse de la ville à la victoire contre les Eubéens (Paus. 9, 22, 2). Si elles sont rares à l'époque archaïque (à Tégée: IG V 2, 95), les consécration palestriques et les inscriptions relatives à l'H. des athlètes se multiplient à partir de la haute époque hellénistique dans l'ensemble du monde grec. L'H. de la jeunesse sportive est alors fréquemment associé à Héraclès (→ Héracles; voir Delorme, J., Gymnasion [1960] 339-340).

Cultes et fêtes d'Hermès

C'est dans sa patrie arcadienne qu'H. est particulièrement honoré, encore qu'inégalement selon les cantons. Les testimonia archéologiques, épigraphiques et littéraires ont été rassemblés et analysés par Jost. Pour les autres régions du monde grec, cf. Eitrem 738-757; Scherer 2342-2358 et Farnell, Cults V 1-61 où les documents sont classés par ordre géographique. Le lecteur de Pausanias est frappé par la fréquence des mentions que fait le Périégète de légendes, rites, cultes, monuments hermaïques dans tout le Péloponnèse. Nous avons regroupé (8) les statues cultuelles les plus vénérables par leur antiquité. Les piliers hermaïques, dont l'origine est attique, connaissent dans les villes péloponnésienes une très grande faveur et Strabon souligne leur densité dans le sanctuaire à l'embouchure de l'Alphée: συχνά δὲ καὶ ἑρμῆα ἐν ταῖς ὁδοῖς (Strabon 8, 3, 12 p. 343). La liste des principaux hermès vus par Pausanias est dressée à la rubrique II J du Catalogue.

Comme divinité agonistique des époques récentes H. se trouvait associé en Laconie, en Messénie, en Argolide, en Achaïe aux Dioscures (→ Dioskouroi) et à Héraclès, dont il partage les ex-voto et les fêtes. Mais d'autres cultes péloponnésiens impliquent H. dans des mystères: des plaquettes en terre cuite ornées de caducées ont été découvertes dans le mégaron de Lykosoura (Jost 451); dans le Καρνάσιον ἄλσος de l'ancienne Oichalia de Messénie, H. apparaissait dans des cérémonies de type éleusinien en l'honneur de → Demeter et de Hagné Coré et sa statue en criophore jouxtait celle d'Apollon Karneios (Paus. 4, 33, 4); sur l'agora de Phares en Achaïe, des rites oraculaires étaient accomplis devant un hermès accosté d'un foyer en marbre où brûlaient des lampes (Paus. 7, 22, 3) et, dans la même ville, une source à poissons sacrés lui appartenait (Paus. 7, 22, 4).

Ces rites régionaux n'ont pas laissé de trace dans l'iconographie. Quant au texte sacré des Pélasges et des rites cabiriques de Samothrace où Hérodote voit la source de l'image du pilier hermaïque (Hdt. 2, 51), on ne peut les utiliser qu'avec prudence, puisque l'origine attique de l'hermès (Paus. 4, 33, 3) paraît assurée (cf. Commentaire). Le xoanon hermaïque de l'Erechthéion, ex-voto de Cécrops (→ Kekrops) (8a), témoigne seulement de l'ancienneté du culte d'H. dans la mémoire des Athéniens, comme le fait aussi sa statue dans le sanctuaire des Semnai sur l'Aréopage, à côté de celles de Gaia et de Pluton (Paus. 1, 28, 6; → Ge, → Hades). C'est comme Chthonios qu'H. connaît une imagerie cultuelle à Athènes, avec le lécythe des Anthesières à Iéna (630).

Pour le reste, H. était devenu le fétiche de la ville où son pilier omniprésent faisait partie de la religion et de la vie populaires (Cat. II i), où il était fêté aux hermaia et où il avait donné son nom au gymnase du Céramique (Paus. 1, 2, 5; Travlos, TopAth 42-43). A Délos, au temps de la colonie athénienne, c'est encore sous cet aspect de patron de l'athlétisme et de la jeunesse qu'il est le mieux connu, sous celui également de protecteur du négoce, sans que ces fonctions n'engendrent ni à Délos, ni ailleurs une imagerie particulière (Bruneau, Cultes 349-354, 604-605). Dans les peintures liturgiques des Compitalia le Mercure du collège des Hermaïstes latins ne revêt pas un aspect différent de celui du dieu grec, dont le caducée ornait l'intervalles des mutules au portique de l'Agora des Italiens (EADélos XIX 24 pl. 8, 6 fig. 23) et servait d'insigne à l'un des petits cavaliers de la mosaïque des dauphins (EADélos XXIX 232-234). Cette banalisation du culte et de l'imagerie d'H., en dépit de variantes régionales difficiles à évaluer, se laisse alors constater à l'échelle du monde gréco-romain.

I. Représentations primitives

A. Hermès aniconique?

1. «Pierres brutes». Tout près de l'H. Agoraios de Phares en Achaïe se dressaient trente pierres carrées (τετράγωνοι λίθοι) que les habitants vénéraient chacune sous le nom d'un dieu, selon la vieille tradition des représentations aniconiques: τιμὰς θεῶν ἀντὶ ἀγαλμάτων εἶχον ἀργοὶ λίθοι (Paus. 7, 22, 4). On peut admettre que certains de ces bêtes, à Phares et ailleurs, désignaient H.

2. Ἑρμαῖοι λόφοι (Hesych. s. v. Ἑρμαῖος λόφος), tas de pierres, «hermès» constitués sur les routes en l'honneur d'H. Enodios, comme ceux découverts à la frontière de la Laconie, de la Tégéatide et de l'Argolide (Jost 162. 453-454). La lecture du nom d'H. sur les tablettes mycéniennes a rendu désuète l'explication par ἔρμα, tas de pierre (Chantraine s. v.). Plutôt qu'une représentation du dieu, l'ἑρμαῖος λόφος est le produit d'un rite de voyage encore attesté à l'époque hellénistique (Anth. Pal. 6, 253, 5-6). Cf. etiam l'explication étiologique dans Schol. Hom. Od. 16, 471: le monceau de pierres est celui des jetons de vote des dieux absolvant H. du meurtre d'Argos.

3. Plaque en pierre rude, inscr. Ἑρμᾶνος. Local. inconnue. De Pikromygdalia en Laconie, au sud de Chrysapha (relation incertaine avec une tombe et l'un des reliefs de Chrysapha). - Dressel, H./Milchhöfer, A., AM 2, 1877, 303. 434 n° 4; Chittenden (1947) 94. pl. 15d. - Date inconnue.

4. «Les hermès arcadiens». Certains de ces piliers (une cinquantaine d'exemplaires complets ou fr. au Mus. de Tégée) sont surmontés d'un pyramidion, sans les caractères anthropomorphes de la tête et du sexe. Les inscr. désignent diverses divinités, jamais H. Mais Pausanias souligne le goût des Arcadiens pour l'ἀγάλμα τετράγωνον (Paus. 8, 48, 6). - Rhomaios, K. A., ArchEph 1911, 148-159 fig. 1-12; Wrede 50-52; Jost 233 n. 3; 453 n. 8 pl. 38, 6. - Pas antérieurs au IV<sup>e</sup> s. av. J.-C.

B. Xoana d'Hermès

5. H. Perphéaios. Monnaies d'Ainos (Thrace). a) AR tétradrachmes, vers 455/4-453/2 av. J.-C. - May, J. M. F., Ainos, its History and Coinage 474-341 B. C. (1950) n° 71; Franke/Hirmer, GrMünze 2 n° 419. - Av. Tête d'H. à dr., avec pétase, cheveux tressés sur la nuque (= 220a) Rv. Devant un bouc vers la dr., pilier-xoanon (fût ponctué) sur un trône; tête barbue coiffée du pétase; caducée devant le pilier. Motifs analogues sur les tétradrachmes frappés à Ainos de Lysimache et des Ptolémées: Lacroix, Reproductions 46 n. 4-6. - b) AR drachmes, vers 357-342 av. J.-C. - May, o. c. n° 438; Jenkins, J. K., Monnaies grecques (1972) 130 fig. 276-277. - Av. Tête d'H. avec pétase de trois quarts à dr. Rv. Pilier-xoanon vers la g. sur un trône richement décoré; canthare dans le champ. Mêmes types, autres symboles = Lacroix, Reproductions 45 n. 2. - Av. Tête d'H. à dr. Rv. Dans un carré creux, bouc vers la dr.; devant lui, en symbole, pilier d'H. barbu vers la g. - d) AU, 365-341 av. J.-C. - Babelon, Traité n° 1508 pl. 345, 14; Lacroix, Reproductions 45 n. 3 pl. 1, 2. - Av. Tête d'H., à g. Rv. Pilier-xoanon vers la g. sur un trône; caducée devant le trône. - e) AE, 365-341 av. J.-C. - Strack, M. L., Die antiken Münzen Nordgriechenlands II 1 (1912) 188 n° 369 pl. 5, 10. - Av. Xoanon-pilier de face, sur un trône. Rv. Corne d'abondance. - f) AE, 280-200 av. J.-C. - Strack, o. c. 195 n° 393 pl. 5, 22. - Av. Tête de Zeus à dr. Rv. Pilier avec phallus et tête imberbe vers la dr., sur un socle bas; symbole du caducée.

L'idole figurée, avec des variantes, dans le monnayage d'Ainos est un xoanon sculpté par Epeios. Selon la légende rapportée par Callimaque, des pêcheurs l'avaient pris dans leurs filets et Apollon ordonna de lui rendre un culte sous le nom d'H. Perphéaios (bibl.: Lacroix, Reproductions 47 n. 1).

6. H. Xoana d'H. en symboles sur les monnaies stéphanéphores d'Athènes: AR tétradrachmes, 183/2 et 151/0 av. J.-C. - Thompson, M., The New Style Silver Coinage of Athens (1961) n° 86-92 pl. 11 (183/2); Boehringer, Chr., Zur Chronologie mittelhellenistischer Münzserien 220-160 v. Chr. (1972) 200 (151/0). - Av. Tête d'Athéna Parthénos à dr. Rv. Chouette sur amphore; derrière l'aile, xoanon d'H. de face, le caducée dans la main g.; le fût se rétrécit en gaine; «Hüftenherme des H.» (Boehringer 200). Référence possible à une idole primitive à Athènes: NumCommPaus 148-149 n° 12 pl. DD 19.

7. H. Imbramos sur des monnaies d'Imbros où l'idole «pélasgique» est toutefois anthropomorphe (Hemberg, B., Die Kabiren [1950] 37-43). - a) AE, ép. hellénistique? - Imhoof-Blumer, MGr 48-50 pl. 1, 10. - Av. Tête d'Artémis à dr. Rv. H. barbu, ithyphallique, la jambe g. surélevée, un rameau dans la main dr. baissée, une phiale dans la main g. avancée, est tourné vers un autel; caducée dans le champ. - b) AE, ép. hellénistique? - Conze, A., Reisen auf den Inseln des thrakischen Meeres (1860) 84 pl. 20, 11. - Av. Tête féminine à dr. Rv. H. coiffé du pétase, ithyphallique, de trois quarts vers la dr., un rameau(?) dans la main dr. baissée, une patère dans la main g. avancée. - c) AE, monnaie des clérouques athéniens, 87/6 av. J.-C. (siège de Sylla)? - Imhoof-Blumer, F., AM 7, 1882, 146-149. - Av. Tête d'Athéna casquée à dr. Rv. H. en pétase, un rameau dans la main dr. baissée, une phiale dans la main g. avancée, tourné vers un thymiatérion à dr.

8. Xoana d'H. décrits ou mentionnés par Pausanias.

a) Athènes: ex-voto en bois, ithyphallique et couvert de myrte, consacré par Cécrops dans le temple d'Athéna Poliade, c'est-à-dire dans la chambre nord de l'Erechthéion (1, 27, 1). - b) Argos: xoana d'H. et d'Aphrodite associés dans le temple d'Apollon Lykeios (2, 19, 6). - c) Mégalopolis: xoanon d'H., œuvre de Damophon, dans le temple d'Aphrodite, à côté d'une Aphrodite Machanitis acrolithe (8, 31, 6). - d) Las (Laconie): un ἀγάλμα ἀρχαῖον d'H. dans le gymnase (3, 24, 7). - e) Trézène: statue d'H. Polygios en bois d'olivier sauvage qui a repris racine pour reverdir. Hé-racclès y a déposé sa massue (2, 31, 10). - f) Cyllène d'Elide: agalma d'H. en forme de membre viril dressé sur une base (6, 26, 5). - g) Mont Cyllène: parmi les xoana, une idole d'H. en bois de thuya, haute de huit pieds (8, 17, 2).

Mèches recourbées en crochets sur les joues. Bouclettes sur le front, perforées (comme aussi des mèches de la barbe). Strophion en boudin retenant une chevelure ondulée sur le crâne, retombant dans le dos sous forme de large tresse.

26.* Pilier hermaïque. Volos, Mus. 503. De Iolkos. – Biesantz, o. c. 25, 29 n° 15 pl. 32. – Vers 450-425 av. J.-C. – Epaufrures au visage (nez raboté). Barbe à mèches courbes entrecroisées. Chevelure peignée en stries sur le crâne, avec des mèches plus épaisses entre les oreilles et la nuque. Sur le front les cheveux débordent en mèches sous le mince strophion.

27.* Tête, brisée au cou. Athènes, Agora S 539. De l'Agora. – Harrison 132. 146-147 n° 161 pl. 43; Willers 2, 42. – Copie du début de l'ép. impériale d'un original des années 470-460 av. J.-C. – Visage sévère. Barbe stylisée en vaguelettes fines. Boucles du front sculptées une à une.

28.* «Hermès Speier». Tête en marbre pentélique(?), brisée à la barbe. Rome, coll. H. Speier. – Willers, D., RM 76, 1969, 316-319 pl. 100-102; Willers 2, 42 pl. 24, 1-2. – Copie romaine(?) d'un original des années 450 av. J.-C. – Chevelure ordonnée en vagues, avec boucles frontales, sans strophion.

Petite plastique: piliers en terre cuite

29.* Base carrée. Paris, Louvre N III 2431. De Rhodes. – Mollard-Besques I 107 n° C 139 pl. 77. – Style sévère. – Couronne de bouclettes sur le front.

30. Base carrée profilée. De l'acropole de Lindos. – Lindos I 567 n° 2340 pl. 110. – Style sévère? – Cheveux en bourrelet sur le front. Barbe étagée en registres.

31. Brisé à mi-fût. Londres, BM 254. – Higgins, BM Terracottas I n° 254 pl. 44. – Vers 450 av. J.-C. – Chevelure en bourrelet sur le front, partagée par une raie.

C. Les hermès classiques non alcaméniens

Ronde bosse: marbre

Pour cette série, qui ne comprend aucun original du V<sup>e</sup> s., on se reporte généralement à la typologie de Curtius (1903): types A et D (Curtius 48-54. 62-68) qui sont à cheveux courts et proches des effigies de Zeus; types B et C (54-62) qui sont à cheveux longs et proches des effigies de Dionysos.

33.* Tête. Copenhague, Glypt. 447. Du Pirée(?). – Poulsen, CatNyCarlsbergGlypt 359-360 n° 514; Harrison 131-132 n. 174; 149 pl. 66, b. – Copie hellénistique (Harrison: vers 100 av. J.-C.) d'un original des années 450-430. – Cheveux et barbe bouclés en vagues. Visage phidiesque. Type A.

34.* Tête. Ibidem 445. Du Pirée(?). – Poulsen, CatNyCarlsbergGlypt 183-184 n° 241; Curtius 6 fig. 6; 8 fig. 8; 10-14; Harrison 131-132. – Cheveux retenus par un large bandeau, sous lequel des mèches dépassent en vagues. Mêmes mèches pour la barbe. Type et date: cf. 33.

35.* Tête. Ibidem 446. Du Pirée(?). – Poulsen, CatNyCarlsbergGlypt 119-120 n° 149; Harrison 131 n. 174. – Au-dessus des mèches en vagues sur le front, boucles coquillées de tradition archaïque. Visage phidiesque. Type et date: cf. 33.

D. L'Hermès Propylaïos d'Alcamène

Ronde bosse: marbre

42. Pilier hermaïque sur une base inscrite. Izmir, Mus. Basmahane 675. Du Gymnase de Védus à Ephèse. – Willers 1, 42-44 fig. 1-4. – Sur l'inscr., cf. Praschniker, C., OeJh 29, 1935, 23-31; Bousquet 568 n. 1; Willers 1, 39-41; Inscr. von Ephesos II (1979) 515. Texte: Ὁὐκ εἰμι τέχνη τοῦ τυχόντος, ἀλλὰ μου|μορφὰν ἐτενέξεν|, ἢ ἡν σκοπῆς, Ἀ[λκα]μένης. – 2<sup>e</sup> moitié du II<sup>e</sup> s. ap. J.-C. – Le pilier d'Ephèse est très mutilé et les traits distinctifs du type se laissent mieux vérifier sur d'autres bonnes copies de l'original. Les hermès alcaméniens s'opposent aux monuments antérieurs par la retombée sur les épaules de longues parotides. Le «type d'Ephèse» diffère du «type de Pergame» par la qualité stylistique et, principalement, par les traits iconographiques suivants qui permettent de constituer la série (21 exemplaires réunis par Willers 1, 42-71. 109): pour les boucles frontales, mèches bouclées courtes (au lieu de longues boucles «en tire-bouchons»), dont la triple couronne serre étroitement la tête (au lieu de s'échafauder en perruque); pour la barbe, forme simplement ovale, avec axe de symétrie définissant l'orientation des mèches (au lieu d'une forme anguleuse, sans axe de symétrie, tendue vers l'avant à la façon d'un masque). Cf. etiam 345.

43. Pilier hermaïque double (tête d'Apollon sur l'autre face) en marbre pentélique. Athènes, Stade, «pilier A». Du Stade. – Willers 1, 56–59 fig. 18–20. 25; Willers 2, 33. 43 pl. 27, 2; Gasparri, C., ASAtene 52/53, 1974/75 (1978), 363 E 3 fig. 60. – 140–144 ap. J.-C. – Le meilleur exemplaire du groupe.

44. * Tête en marbre pentélique(?), brisée au menton. Rome, Mus. Naz. Rom. 121008. D'une villa au sud de Rome. – Willers 1, 49–51 fig. 12–13. 16; Willers 2, 33. 43 pl. 26; Helbig* 2249 (v. Steuben, H.; avec bref aperçu sur les principales questions du pilier hermaïque). – Peut-être attique.

45. * Fr. de pilier. Leningrad, Ermitage A 26. De Tivoli, Villa Hadriana. – Willers 1, 44–48 fig. 5. 7. 9; Willers 2, 33. 43 pl. 27, 1. – Travail d'un atelier urbain de Rome, ép. d'Hadrien. – Forme classique des yeux, grands ouverts, dont la paupière supérieure recoupe la paupière inférieure.

46. «H. Simonetti». Tête en marbre pentélique, brisée au cou. Munich, Glypt. DV 37. – Willers 1, 51–56 fig. 14–15. 17; Vienne-Schlörb, KatSkulpt-München II 49 fig. 27–30. – Époque d'Hadrien. –

E. Variations archaïsantes sur l'hermès alcaménien.

1. Le type de Pergame

Ronde bosse: marbre

47. * Pilier hermaïque, brisé sous le sexe. Istanbul, Mus. Arch 1433. Du Gymnase de Pergame. – Willers 1, 75–78 fig. 49–51; Harrison, 122–124 pl. 66 c; Hermary 137–149. – Sur les traits distinctifs du type, cf. 42. Sur l'inscr., cf. Bousquet, J., BCH 80, 1956, 565–579. Distique gravé sur le fût: Εἰδήσεις Ἀλκαμένεος περικαλλῆς ἀγάλμα, Ἐρμῆν τὸν πρὸ πυλῶν εἰσάτο Περγᾶμιος. En dessous la maxime Γνωθι σαυτὸν. L'arrière du pilier et de la tête est seulement dégrossi. Plutôt qu'à un original de la fin du V<sup>e</sup> s. (Hermary 146) le type de Pergame se rattache à l'œuvre d'un atelier néo-attique recomposant des traits classiques (Willers 1, 85. 88; Vienne-Schlörb 50). – Série de 5 répliques, celle de Pergame datant au plus tôt de l'ép. d'Hadrien.

48. * Buste hermaïque. Rome, jardin Barberini. – Willers 1, 78 fig. 52–54. – Par rapport à la tête du pilier de Pergame, allongement du visage et de la barbe ainsi que traitement plus plastique de la coiffure. Meilleur exemplaire du groupe.

49. Fr. de pilier hermaïque. Ostie, Tenuta Aldobrandini A. S. 35. D'Ostie. – Willers, o.c. 28, 315–316 pl. 98–99. – La 5<sup>e</sup> réplique connue, mais très mutilée, du type de Pergame.

50. Tête en marbre pentélique. Athènes, Mus. Acropole 2281. De l'Acropole. – Brouskari, CatAcr

22–23 fig. 10. – Reprend des traits distinctifs du type (système pileux), mais sans en constituer une réplique.

51. * Tête. Venise, Mus. Arch. 70. – Willers 1, 93 fig. 63. 65. 67; Traversari, G., Sculture del V-IV sec. a. C. del Mus. Arch. di Venezia (1973) 20 n° 5; Hermary 143 fig. 9. – Les traits pergaméniens sont stylisés en masque.

2. Le type Warocqué

52. Tête en pierre sombre. Bâle, coll. privée. – Willers 1, 92–93 fig. 60–62. – Série de 9 répliques (Willers 1, 91–95). – Très haute calotte crânienne, en sorte que les boucles en tire-bouchons, horizontales dans le type de Pergame, s'inclinent ici vers le visage. Disposition très régulière des mèches de la barbe.

3. Type Athènes/Eleusis

Ronde bosse: marbre

53. Buste formant la moitié d'un hermès double. Vatican 129. – Lippold, SkulptVatMus 12–13 pl. 7; Willers 1, 97 n° 23. – Exemplaire le plus complet d'une série de 7 répliques, remontant à un modèle de la fin du I<sup>er</sup> s. av. J.-C.

54. Tête. Eleusis, Mus. 5118. D'Eleusis. – Inédite. – Par rapport à 53, la barbe comporte des mèches en flammèches sans enroulements.

4. Types «alcaménoïdes»

55. * Tête en marbre pentélique. Athènes, Agora S 1077. D'une citerne à l'ouest de l'Agora. – Harrison 127. 131. 134. 148–149 n° 163 pl. 44. – Exemple d'H. «alcaménoïde» (Harrison) caractérisé par de multiples contaminations entre des traits classiques et des traits archaïsants empruntés au modèle alcaménien. Le type évoque celui de Pergame, mais la barbe à flammèches est ovale. Le visage évoque celui de Copenhague 447 (33), mais l'expression est modifiée par la perruque.

5. Type à pilos

56. * Tête en marbre grec. Copenhague, Glypt. 429. Du Pirée(?). – Poulsen, CatNyCarlsbergGlypt 43–44 n° 25; Willers 1, 99 n. 140. – Meilleur exemplaire d'une catégorie caractérisée par le couvre-chef posé sur la couronne de boucles. La barbe peignée s'inspire d'un modèle de la fin de l'archaïsme (cf. 27). Joues d'un réalisme plus tardif.

Gemmes

57. a) Cornaline rectangulaire. Boston, MFA 95.85. D'Athènes. – Furtwängler, AG II 45 n° 25 pl. 29; Lippold, Gemmen pl. 10, 10; Boardman, GGFR n° 515. – Style classique (V<sup>e</sup> s. av. J.-C.). – Pilier hermaïque de face, flanqué d'un caducée. Barbe et cheveux courts. Couvre-chef (modius?). – b) Cornaline ovale. Munich, Münzslg. A 2009. – AGDI 3, n° 2206 pl. 192. – I<sup>er</sup> s. av. J.-C. – Sur une base à deux degrés, hermès phallique, barbu, coiffé d'un bandeau, avec boucles parotides, de profil à g.; dans le champ, caducée et palme avec taenia croisées.

Ronde bosse: marbre

58. * «H. Propylaios». Pilier. Délos, Mus. De l'entrée du sanct. d'Apollon. – Marcadé, MusDélos 151 pl. 10; Hermary 137–142 fig. 1–3. – Consécration des Amphictyons en 341/40 av. J.-C. (inscr. de la base). – La tête très rongée se laisse reconstruire d'après une autre tête délienne A 6558 (Hermary fig. 4–6), dont les traits présentent des affinités avec le type de Pergame élaboré par un sculpteur néo-attique. Cf. 47. Cf. Commentaire, p. 374.

59. * Pilier hermaïque servant d'appui à la statue de Sisyphe II dans l'ex-voto de Daochos à Delphes. Delphes, Mus. – Dohrn, T., dans API VIII (1968) 41–42 pl. 35; Hermary 144 fig. 10–11. – 337/6 av. J.-C. – Avec 58, la plus ancienne attestation des boucles en tire-bouchons, d'une élégance maniériste comme la barbe aux mèches ondulées parallèles.

Petite plastique en bronze

65. Pilier hermaïque. Bonn, Akad. Kunstmus. 145. De Samothrace. – Lullies 1, 14. 44 pl. 4, 1. – III<sup>e</sup> s. av. J.-C. – Tête coiffée du pilos. Barbe courte. Sur le fût, inscr. votive en lettres ponctuées du III<sup>e</sup> s.

66. * Délos, Mus. 5617 (anc. n°). – Marcadé, MusDélos pl. 13 (non commentée dans le texte). – II<sup>e</sup> s. av. J.-C. ? – Cheveux divisés par une raie et peignés en boucles vers les oreilles. Barbe à mèches recourbées. Bouche entrouverte. Les yeux sont un peu ombrés par les arcades.

Plastique en bronze

71. (= Agon 14, = Dionysos 170* avec bibl., = Eros 712) Pilier hermaïque servant d'appui à la statue d'Eros Enagonios. Tunis, Bardo. Du navire naufragé de Mahdia. – Fuchs, W., Der Schiffsfund von Mahdia (1963) 12–14 pl. 8. – Vers 130–120 av. J.-C. – La barbe est sculptée en trois parties bien différenciées: ailes des favoris, grande mouche ovale sous la lèvre, rabat carré avec des mèches tressées en cordes. Triple rangée de boucles perlées sur le front et parotides retombant bas sur les épaules. Un voile chiffonné recouvre la tête, pour le contact du coude d'Eros. Signature de Boéthos de Calcédoine (Bithynie).

72. a) * Fr. d'un hermès-support. New York, MMA 1897.22.13. – Richter, MetrMusBronzes 121–122 n° 235; Marcadé (1953) 506–507 fig. 11. – Ép. romaine? – Le trou au sommet du crâne autorise l'identification comme support. Coiffure durement sculptée en casque. Tripartition de la barbe en registres superposés de mèches. – b) Buste. New York, MMA 1919.192.1. – Inédit? – Ép. gréco-romaine. – Haut de pilier hermaïque. La perruque de boucles renvoie globalement au type de Pergame.

73. Pilier hermaïque. Paris, Petit Palais DUT 12. – Petit, J., Bronzes ant. de la coll. Dutuit (1980) 106–107 n° 41. – Ép. gréco-romaine. – Sur un très long fût, orné du phallus et s'amincissant vers le bas, la tête se caractérise par une barbe carrée et par une coiffure en bourrelet sur le front, en chignon sur la nuque, avec deux rubans retombant sur les épaules.

Terres cuites

74. Pella, Mus. E 1007. - Inédit. - Ep. hellénistique. - La tête est coiffée d'un diadème qui surmonte une couronne de boucles à trois rangées. Parotides sur les épaules. Barbe carrée à mèches lisses.

75. * Délos, Mus. A 3365. Du quartier du théâtre. - Laumonier, A., EADélos XXIII. Les figurines de terre cuite (1956) 127 n° 324 pl. 37. - Pilier. Tête coiffée d'un polos.

76. * Paris, Louvre D 277. D'Eléonte. - Besques III 148 pl. 57 a. - Fin I<sup>er</sup> s. av. - début I<sup>er</sup> s. ap. J.-C. - Pilier sur base moulurée. Coiffure côtelée, parotides torsadées. «Dionysos» (Besques).

77. Istanbul, Mus. Arch. 1556. De Priène. - Mendel, G., Mus. Imp. Ottomans. Cat. des figurines gr. de terre cuite (1908) n° 2088 pl. 6, 2. - II<sup>e</sup>-I<sup>er</sup> s. av. J.-C. - Pilier au fût orné d'un phallus ailé et d'un caducée en relief. Tête couronnée de trois rangées de bouclettes et d'un strophion avec lemnisque retombant vers l'avant. Barbe à huit boucles torsadées.

78. * Délos, Mus. A 3303. Du quartier du théâtre. - Laumonier, o. c. 75, 126 n° 319 pl. 35. - II<sup>e</sup>-I<sup>er</sup> s. av. J.-C. - Pilier sur une base moulurée à degrés. Le fût est orné d'un caducée en relief. Les testicules sont noués par un ruban. Chevelure ceinte d'une couronne en bourrelet avec lemnisque retombant sur les épaules.

80. Fr. de pilier. Ibidem A 3401. De la région entre le Portique d'Antigone et l'Agora des Italiens. - Laumonier, o. c. 75, 129 n° 334 pl. 36. - II<sup>e</sup>-I<sup>er</sup> s. av. J.-C. - Tête brisée. De longues parotides ondulantes sur les épaules. Tenons garnis d'offrandes (galette et fruits). «Hermès dionysiaque» (Laumonier).

H. Les hermès juvéniles

Cf. etiam «Mantelhermen», Commentaire p. 374.

Ronde bosse

81. * Pilier hermaïque en marbre de Paros. Délos, Mus. A 5637. De la Maison de l'Hermès. - Marcadé (1953) 512-527 fig. 15-17. - II<sup>e</sup>-I<sup>er</sup> s. av. J.-C. - Le fût était décoré d'ornements polychromes aujourd'hui évanides: sous le sexe (qui était en bronze et rapporté), nœud de ruban (cf. 78-79) et caducée enrubanné; bandeau et frise de postes rouges tout en bas. Traces de couleurs à la tête qui est d'un jeune athlète imberbe idéalisé portant un strophion arrondi sur une chevelure courte et bouclée.

83. * Pilier en marbre. Ibidem A 6992. De la région au sud de l'Agora des Compétaliastes. - Marcadé, MusDélos 158 n. 3; 421 n. 1 pl. 16-17. - Tête juvénile d'athlète lysippique, sans strophion ni bandeau dans les cheveux.

84. * Pilier en marbre. Ibidem A 6888. - Marcadé, MusDélos 109. 158. 208 n. 1 pl. 16. - Sculpture inachevée. Fût drapé. Tête aux yeux petits, aux cheveux fournis (type Satyre?).

85. * Pilier en marbre de Paros. Ibidem CLXXII. Du quartier du théâtre. - Michalowski, o. c. 82b, 56-57 fig. 35 pl. 40. - 2<sup>e</sup> moitié du II<sup>e</sup> s. av. J.-C. - Le sexe et les tenons étaient rapportés. Tête à traits réalistes (cf. etiam Marcadé [1953] 520).

86. Tête en marbre. Athènes, Agora S 1021. De la région du portique N.-E. - Harrison 162 n° 209 pl. 55. - Ep. antonine. - Tête juvénile idéalisée à courtes mèches bouclées serrées par un bandeau.

Terres cuites

87. * Petit pilier sur base quadrangulaire moulurée, chargée d'offrandes et munie d'une fente de tirelire. Délos, Mus. A 3386. De la région entre le Portique d'Antigone et l'Agora des Italiens. - Laumonier, o. c. 75, 128-129 n° 331 pl. 36. - Chevelure courte ceinte d'une couronne en bourrelet. Lemnisque descendant sur les tenons.

88. Groupe sur base ronde. Paris, Louvre B 130. De Myrina. - Mollard-Besques II 130 pl. 156 b. - Un enfant dont les longues draperies découvrent le ventre prend appui sur un hermès phallique imberbe à la tête couronnée. Cf. etiam un petit hermès en bronze. Délos, Mus. A 723. - Deonna, o. c. 290, 307 pl. 90, 795. - I<sup>er</sup> s. av. J.-C. - Le pilier phallique est surmonté d'une tête enfantine (peut-être d'Eros).

257. * Stamnos f. r. Paris, Louvre CA 944 (G 185). — ARV 207, 142: P. de Berlin; CVA 2, pl. 20, 2-5. — 500-490 av. J.-C. — A: escorté par deux Satyres, H. couché sur un bélier. B: Dionysos, symétriquement couché sur un bouc. Les bêtes servent de klinai aux deux banqueteurs.

Gemmes

258. * Chaton de bague, pâte de verre couleur miel. Munich, Münzslg. A 921. De Rome, marché de l'art. — AGDI 2, 106 n° 1207 pl. 128. — Ep. impériale. — H. (chlamyde dans le dos, lance à la main) chevauche un bélier vers la g. en direction d'un autel incandescent garni de fruits, jouté d'un arbre.

F. Hermès criophore

Il s'en faut de beaucoup que tous les personnages criophores soient des représentations d'H. Ainsi le kouros colossal de Thasos (Richter, G. M. A., Kouros 3 [1970] 51 n° 14 fig. 84-86, 106) est-il peut-être un Apollon ou simplement un dédicant, «un kouros porteur de bélier» (Guide de Thasos [1967] 108-113, 115-116). Il serait tout aussi arbitraire de considérer comme des H. le criophore dédalique de Berlin (Neugebauer, KatBrBerlin I 70 n° 158 pl. 19) ou le moschophore de l'Acropole d'Athènes (Lullies/Hirmer, Plastik 4 50-51 pl. 28-29). Dans les séries ci-dessous on n'appellera H. que les figures caractérisées par les chaussures ailées. Le caducée n'est jamais conservé dans la petite plastique et le logement au creux de la main pouvait aussi bien avoir renfermé la houlette. Quelques documents illustreront l'identité ou la similitude iconographique entre le dieu pastoral et les bergers.

1. Le bélier sous le bras: types archaïques

Petite plastique en bronze

260. * Boston, MFA 99489. De Sparte. — Kunze 49-58 fig. 22. — Atelier de Sicyone, 510-500 av. J.-C. — H., en sandales ailées, coiffé d'un chapeau et vêtu d'un chitoniskos resserré à la taille par une ceinture retombant en nœud ornemental, avance le pied g. Le bras dr., écarté du corps, tenait le caducée. La main g. saisit par une patte le bélier maintenu par le coude sous l'aisselle. L'animal, figuré presque verticalement, tourne la tête vers la dr.

261. New York, coll. Baker. — v. Bothmer, D., Greek, Etruscan and Roman Antiquities, An Exhib. from the Coll. of W. Cummings Baker (1950) 8 n° 20. — Atelier péloponnésien, vers 550 av. J.-C. — H. (chaussures ailées), coiffé d'un chapeau conique, le chitoniskos serré à la taille, tenait le caducée levé obliquement. Bélier de face sous le bras g.

262. * Athènes, Mus. Nat. 12347. D'Andritsaina. — Perdrizet 301 pl. 7. — Vers 550 av. J.-C. — H. (chaussures ailées), en chitoniskos brodé, porte un chapeau conique caractérisé par un ornement qui peut évoquer des ailerons et qui rappelle des motifs décoratifs laciens. Bélier tenu obliquement sous le bras.

263. * Berlin-Ouest, Staatl. Mus. 30552. D'Arcadie. — Neugebauer, KatBrBerlin I 67-68 n° 165 pl. 23. — Fin du VI<sup>e</sup> s. av. J.-C.? — H. (chaussures ailées, chiton non brodé, sans ceinture) se tient sur une base rectangulaire, le pied g. légèrement avancé.

264. a) * «Criophore Stathatos». Athènes, Mus. Nat., coll. Hélène Stathatos ST 328. — Kunze 50-58 pl. 6-7; Rolley, Cl., Les bronzes grecs (1983) 95 fig. 72. — Le chiton brodé descend jusqu'aux genoux. Contrairement au schéma courant, c'est le pied dr. qui est légèrement avancé. Jambes brisées aux chevilles. b) Boston, MFA 04.6. D'Arcadie. — Kunze 51 n. 6 fig. 21. — Atelier de Sicyone, 520-510 av. J.-C. — Œuvre de même qualité et posant les mêmes problèmes d'interprétation que 264a.

265. * Berger criophore à l'image d'H. New York, MMA 43.11.3. — Richter, G. M. A., BullMMA 4, 1946, 250 (fig.). — Le personnage en longue pèlerine, coiffé d'un chapeau conique, tient le bélier sous le bras g. et présente de la main dr. un vase (de lait?). Dédicace sur la base: «Ainéas (?) à Pan».

Figurine en plomb

267. Sparte, Mus. Du sanct. d'Artémis Orthia. — Dawkins, R. M., The Sanctuary of Artemis Orthia, JHS Suppl. 5 (1929) 275 fig. c; Pipili, Lac 52 fig. 78. — VI<sup>e</sup> s. av. J.-C. — H. en chitoniskos, de profil vers la dr. Le bras dr., plié au coude, tient obliquement le caducée. Le bélier est figuré verticalement en avant du côté g.

2. Le bélier sous le bras: types classiques

Ronde bosse

268. H. criophore d'Onatas d'Egine, ex-voto des Phénéates à Olympie: Paus. 5, 27, 8. — Le dieu coiffé du chapeau conique (zuvf), vêtu du chiton et de la chlamyde, portait le bélier sous le bras. La statue en bronze d'Onatas a été exécutée avec l'aide de son élève Kallitèles. — Dörig 2, 15-16.

Petite plastique en bronze

269. * Paris, Cab. Méd. 313. — Dörig 2, 16-20 fig. 20-21, 23-24, 30-32. — 2<sup>e</sup> quart du V<sup>e</sup> s. av. J.-C. — Le dieu, représenté de face, avec une pondération jambe dr. d'appui — jambe g. fléchie, tenait sans doute le caducée dans la main dr. Pas d'ailes talonnières. Drapé dans une ample pèlerine par-dessus le chiton, il est coiffé de la kyné. Visage carré à barbe bouclée. Bélier tenu obliquement sous le bras g. La statuette s'inspire probablement de l'œuvre d'Onatas. La tête 2344 du Mus. de l'Acropole d'Athènes (Dörig 2, 18 fig. 25; BDFH fig. 157) pourrait être une copie romaine de l'original d'ép. sévère.

Terres cuites

271. * Groupe de figurines béotiennes, datables du milieu du V<sup>e</sup> s. av. J.-C., dont certaines sont issues du même moule. a) * Paris, Louvre CA 626. - Mollard-Besques I 90 n° C 41 pl. 63. - b) University, Univ. of Mississippi 77.3.319. - Dörig 3, 138 n. 39 fig. 11 (ex. complet). - c) * Washington, Corcoran Gall. 26.527. - Inédite. - d) * Budapest, Mus. Beaux-Arts T 64. - Szilágyi, J. G./Castiglione, L., Gr.-röm. Sammlung, Führer (1957) pl. 13, 1. - e) Thessalonique, Mus. Arch. 1771. - Olynthus VII 260 pl. 33. - f) Thessalonique, Mus. Arch. 02106. - Olynthus IV 337 pl. 32. - g) Tunis, Bardo, salle 8, vitr. IV (inédite?). - Ces criophores imberbes et juvéniles, H. ou bergers (pas d'attribut déterminant), se présentent avec une pondération et des vêtements (chlamyde, chapeau conique) qui évoquent l'H. de la cornaline de Dioscourides (307) et la statue du Pseudo-Phocion dans la Sala della Biga au Mus. du Vatican. Sur la question des rapports avec un modèle plastique de Kalon d'Egine: Dörig 3, 134-142.

3. Le bélier sur les épaules, les pattes saisies d'une main

Petite plastique en bronze

272. * Karlsruhe, Bad. Landesmus. 68/62 (347). D'Ephyra. - Bildkatalog des Bad. Landesmus. Karlsruhe (1976) n° 49. - Vers 530 av. J.-C. - Le personnage en chitoniskos brodé, le visage barbu souriant, maintient le bélier sur ses épaules en saisissant ses pattes antérieures de la main g. Caducée ou houlette dans la main dr. ramenée vers la poitrine.

273. Métaponte, Antiquarium. D'un dépôt votif près du temple d'Apollon Lycien. - AA 1966, 319. 323 fig. 93. - Atelier italiote, début V<sup>e</sup> s. av. J.-C. - Figure de kouros, le bras g. plié au coude, la main refermée sur une houlette ou un caducée, le bélier en équilibre sur les épaules. Geste (de prière?) de la main dr. avancée, paume tendue. Cf. etiam Rolley, Cl., RA 1989, 115-117 fig. 1-3.

274. Genève, coll. G. Ortiz. - Schefold, Meisterwerke 61-62. 223 n° 254; Hommes et dieux de la Grèce antique, Cat. exp. Bruxelles (1982) 230-231 n° 146. - 490-480 av. J.-C. Atelier de Sicione? - Le personnage, en manteau retombant en plis sur les épaules, saisit les quatre pattes du bélier de sa main g.; la main dr. ramenée vers l'avant se referme sur une houlette ou un caducée. La tête manque.

275. «Criophore Sabouroff» (statuette seulement connue par un dessin). - Furtwängler, A., Stg. Sabouroff II pl. 146; Dörig 1, 222-224 fig. 66. - Vers 480 av. J.-C. - Kouros dont le bras dr., légèrement fléchi au coude, est porté vers l'avant (main brisée). La main g. saisit les quatre pattes du bélier.

Terres cuites

276. a) * b) Deux figurines. Paris, Louvre CA 806 et CA 323. - Mollard-Besques I 14 B 80-81 pl. 10. - Début du V<sup>e</sup> s. av. J.-C. Atelier béotien. - H., en chaussures ailées, enveloppé dans un manteau dont les draperies archaïques retombent sur les épaules, se détache de trois quarts face sur un autel. Le bras dr. plié au coude tenait le caducée, la main g. maintient le bélier.

277. * Relief fr. Londres, BM 1224. De Locres. - Higgins, BMTerracottas I 333 n° 1224 pl. 168. - Milieu du V<sup>e</sup> s. av. J.-C. - H., la barbe en pointe, coiffé du pé-tase et drapé dans un manteau, de trois quarts profil vers la dr. où était représenté un autre personnage (restes de draperies). Le caducée est tenu obliquement de la main dr.; la main g. saisit les quatre pattes du bélier.

Statuette en plomb

279. * «Criophore Cahn». Bâle, coll. H. A. Cahn HC 1019. - Cahn 559-564 pl. 42b. 43b; BDFH 147 fig. 183-184; Dörig 1, 224-225 fig. 67a-b. - Vers 460 av. J.-C. - Le criophore est un éphèbe nu dont la main dr. (perforée) tenait peut-être le caducée (bras le long du corps). La main g. saisit les quatre pattes du bélier. Le plomb étant un peu tordu, la pondération de la figure a été modifiée, mais la jambe libre est la dr., légèrement avancée.

4. Le bélier sur les épaules, les pattes saisies des deux mains

Terres cuites

280. * Représentations hybrides, mi-figurines, mi-piliers hermaïques. a) Munich, Antikenslg. 5266. - Lullies 1, 37 pl. 3, 1-2. - Date incertaine: vers 550-540 (Lullies)? - Tête barbue, coiffée du pilos. Pieds en saillie à la base du fût orné du phallos dressé. Des mains saisissent de chaque côté les pattes du bélier posé sur les épaules. - b) * Dresde, Staatl. Kunstslg., Albertinum Z V 1159. - Lullies 1, 37 n. 15. - Analogue.

281. Petit hermès. Munich, Antikenslg. 6958. - Lullies 1, 15 n° 2; 38. 45. 49 pl. 4, 2. - Tête barbue coiffée du pilos. Fût garni du sexe dressé. Bélier posé en travers des épaules drapées.

Figurine en ivoire

282. Petit kouros. Thessalonique, Mus. Arch. D'Amphipolis. - BCH 104, 1980, 649 fig. 144. - Copie hellénistique d'un modèle de la fin de l'ép. archaïque? - La symétrie faciale du schéma inclut la position du bélier sur les épaules: chaque main saisit une paire de pattes.

Figurines en terre cuite

Ronde bosse en marbre

286. * «Criophore Wilton House». Londres, Warburg Inst. (prêt). - Michaelis, AntM 702-703 n° 144; Vermeule, C./v. Bothmer, D., AJA 60, 1956, 347 n° 144 pl. 105, 6; Ridgway, B. S., Hesperia 50, 1981, 431 n. 36; Zagdoun 201 n° 152 pl. 68, 247. - Copie romaine d'un original archaïsant du I<sup>er</sup> s. av. J.-C. - La statue se caractérise par une symétrie frontale d'une extrême raideur. Des draperies archaïsantes, tombant jusqu'aux pieds joints, habillent les flancs du corps dont l'avant est nu. Tête barbue, à moustaches, à triple couronne de bouclettes, à longues parotides tressées en cordes. Le bélier, dont la tête s'incline vers celle de l'homme, se caractérise par le rendu vériste des mèches laineuses. Les mains qui le maintiennent sont très rapprochées (à la différence de celles du criophore Barracco).

287. * Corinthe, Mus. S 686. De l'Agora de Corinthe, devant les boutiques ouest. - Johnson, F. P., Corinth IX, Sculpture (1931) 28-29 n° 21; AJA 34, 1935, 69 fig. 10; Ridgway, o. c. 286, 431 pl. 92; Zagdoun 201 n° 152 pl. 68, 246. - Statue brisée en haut des cuisses, visage raboté. Des draperies archaïsantes habillent verticalement les flancs. La coiffure se caractérise par une perruque de bouclettes et par des parotides tressées en cordes. Les mains qui saisissent les pattes sont rapprochées vers le milieu de la poitrine.

288. Statuette fr. Le Pirée, Mus. Arch. 85. - Inédite. - Torse drapé latéralement et extrémité de la barbe. Restes du bélier tenu à deux mains.

Relief en marbre

289. * (= Aphrodite 1340 avec bibl.) Athènes, Mus. Nat. 54. D'Athènes. - Harl-Schaller 241-253 pl. 84. - Vers la fin du V<sup>e</sup> s. av. J.-C. - Sur l'une des trois faces décorées d'un pilier, sous une frise de palmettes et de lotus, H. criophore de trois quarts profil vers la dr. La chevelure retenue par un bandeau est remontée en chignon sur la nuque et une longue parotide torsadée descend derrière l'oreille. Triple rangée de bouclettes sur le front. Barbe taillée en pointe. Les pattes postérieures du bélier sont saisies de la main dr., la main g. tient en même temps le caducée et les pattes antérieures. Draperies sur l'avant-bras g.

Statuette en bronze

290. * Délos, Mus. B 5984-2330. De Délos. - Deonna, W., EADélos XVIII, Le mobilier délien (1938) 351 n. 12 pl. 100, 884. - 1<sup>er</sup> s. av. J.-C. - Le criophore coiffé du pé-tase sous lequel dépasse une couronne de bouclettes au-dessus du front, en chiton et manteau court, marche à grands pas vers la dr. en maintenant le bélier des deux mains sur ses épaules.

Monnaies de bronze

291. AE Tanagra (Béotie), émissions pseudautonomes, ép. impériale. - NumCommPaus 115 n° 5 pl. X 11-12; Lacroix, Reproductions 245 pl. 20, 4; Dörig 1, 225 fig. 68. 70. - Rv. Criophore de face, nu, chaque main saisissant une paire de pattes.

292. Monnaies d'Egine. a) AE, Septime Sévère, (193-211). - NumCommPaus 46 n° 7 pl. L 5; Milbank, S. R., The Coinage of Aegina, NNM 24 (1925) 56b pl. 4, 11; Lacroix, Reproductions 69 pl. 3, 4. - Rv. Criophore de face, nu, les pieds joints, les bras au corps puis pliés au coude, chaque main saisissant une paire de pattes du bélier. - b) AE, Septime Sévère. - Milbank, o. c. 57d pl. 4, 13; Forrer, Weber II n° 3642 pl. 134; Lacroix, Reproductions 69-70. - Rv. Criophore marchant vers la g., la tête du bélier vers la g. Schéma inversé sur une monnaie de Plautilla (202-205); Milbank, o. c. 59d pl. 5, 9; Lacroix, Reproductions pl. 3, 5.

5. L'Hermès criophore de Calamis

293. Statue de culte d'un sanct. de Tanagra, œuvre disparue de Calamis (2<sup>e</sup> quart du V<sup>e</sup> s. av. J.-C.). - Connue par Paus. 9, 22, 1-2. - Le dieu représenté en éphèbe portait le bélier sur ses épaules comme le faisait à chaque fête annuelle le plus beau des jeunes gens de la ville, selon la légende étiologique rapportée par le Périégète. Mais si la jeunesse du criophore tanagréen et le port du bélier sur les épaules sont des faits certains, on ne sait quel schéma exact de criophorie Calamis avait mis en œuvre. De la documentation réunie ci-dessus on ne peut tirer aucun argument décisif en faveur de l'une ou de l'autre formule (pattes saisies d'une main ou des deux mains).

Contrairement à Onatas (268) dont l'art, semble-t-il, fut de donner plus d'unité et de cohérence plastique à un schéma archaïque courant, Calamis devait imaginer sa composition à partir d'une typologie antérieure plus variée. S'il s'agissait, comme le suggère la légende, de représenter un H. criophore en mouvement, la statuette Cahn (279) a plus de chances de refléter le modèle plastique que toute autre œuvre, y compris le criophore Barracco (285). Pour ce qui est du visage, J. Dörig suggère un type comme celui de l'hermès double Barracco (Helbig<sup>4</sup> 646 n° 1896; Dörig 1, 226-229 fig. 73).

6. Hermès criophore dans la peinture de vases: schémas divers

294. * Olpé f. n. Paris, Louvre F 151. - ABV 450, 3; P. du Louvre F 161; Simon, Götter 301-302 fig. 288. - Vers 520 av. J.-C. - H. en pé-tase, drapé dans un manteau brodé, s'élance vers la dr. en retournant la tête. Il porte sur ses épaules un bélier dont les pattes pénétrant dans la draperie. La toison est marquée de quatre H en rehauts blancs, à l'initiale d'H. qui aurait volé la bête? (Simon).

295. * Skyphos f. n. Paris, Louvre F 165 bis. - Gr. du Vatican G 57? - Vers 420 av. J.-C. - Entre deux yeux prophylactiques, entre des branches de lierre, H. (pétase, chaussures ailées) s'élance vers la dr., un bélier dans les bras.

298.* «Hermès de Trézène». Athènes, Mus. Nat. 243. De Damala (site de Trézène). - Legrand, E., BCH 16, 1892, 165-174 pl. 2-17; Despinis 237-244 pl. 77-86. - Copie romaine (II<sup>e</sup> s. ap. J.-C.) d'un original de Naucydès, vers 390 av. J.-C. - H. de grandeur naturelle, en pétase ailé, l'épaule g. drapée. Brisures aux bras et aux jambes. La main g. pouvait tenir le caducée. La main dr., le long du corps, tenait par les cornes un bélier assis sur l'arrière-train, les pattes antérieures repliées. Statue athlétique de rythme polyclétéen, dont la tête aux cheveux bouclés s'incline un peu vers l'épaule dr.

arietem (Phrixos) de Naucydès (Bartoccini, R., Le Terme di Lepcis, AfrIt 4 [1929] 131-132 pl. 131-133). De l'H. de Trézène on rapproche également l'H. de Virunum: Piccottini, Die Rundskulpturen des Stadtgebietes von Virunum (1968) 13 n° 5 pl. 7.

299. Fragments. Le Pirée, Mus. Arch. 3910 (tête, anc. Athènes, Mus. Nat. 516), 1750 + 2199. - Despinis 237-244. - Ep. d'Hadrien. Identifiés par G. Despinis comme d'une seconde copie, partiellement inachevée, de l'H. de Trézène. - Le bélier, dans une attitude moins redressée que chez celui d'Athènes, pose les pattes sur une petite élévation à l'avant de la plinthe.

300. Statuette en marbre pentélique. Athènes, Mus. Nat. 2883. - Blümel, C., Griech. Bildhauerarbeit (1927) 65 n° 33 pl. 36 a-b; Despinis pl. 86, 1-2. - Ep. antonine. - H. en pétase ailé et chlamyde, avec le même port de tête que dans la statue de Trézène. La «béquille» non travaillée à la dr. du dieu devait être sculptée en bélier (identification Despinis).

Monnaies

392.* Monnaies thraces d'ép. impériale. a)* AE, Anchialos, Marc Aurèle (161–180). – Strack, o. c. 5e, 217. 223 n° 427 pl. 6, 12; Rizzo, G. E., Prassitele (1932) 8 pl. 4, 4; Lacroix, Reproductions 298–299. 304–305 pl. 27, 5. – Rv. H., de trois quarts face à dr., est appuyé contre un pilier sur lequel il a posé l'enfant qui tend le bras. – b) AE, Pautalia, Caracalla (211–217). – Ruzicka, L., BullInstArchBulg 7, 1932–33, 138 n° 516 pl. 4, 1; Rizzo, o. c. pl. 4, 3; Lacroix, Reproductions pl. 27, 6. – Rv. Variante du même schéma. On notera que sur ces monnaies le bras dr. est levé seulement jusqu'à hauteur d'épaule, contrairement à l'attitude de l'H. d'Olympie (394).

Ronde bosse en marbre

393. Groupe fr. Athènes, Agora S 33. De l'Agora. – Harrison 162–163 n° 210 pl. 56. – II<sup>e</sup> s. ap. J.-C. – Pilier hermaïque de style archaïsant, recouvert d'une draperie sur laquelle se tient assis un enfant soutenu par une main: copie inspirée du pédophore de Céphissodote? Cf. etiam le groupe de Madrid, Mus. Arch.: Blanco Freijeiro, o. c. 41, n° 39 E pl. 21; Stucchi, S., dans Le moulage. Actes du coll. int. Paris, avril 1987 (1988) 211–214: reconstitution du groupe avec un nouveau fr. de moulage antique d'El Djem.

2. L'Hermès de Praxitèle

394.* H. de Praxitèle. Olympie, Mus. – Signalé dans l'Héraion par Paus. 5, 17. 3. – Rizzo, o. c. 392a, 66–73 pl. 99–101; Lippold, GrPl 241 pl. 84, 2; Scheffold, PKG pl. 115; Lullies, Plastik<sup>4</sup> 116–117 pl. 226–227. – Sur le problème chronologique (original des années 330 ou copie du début de l'ép. impériale, en raison du travail et du poli du marbre) cf. Lullies qui résume la discussion. – L'enfant Dionysos repose sur le bras g. d'H. accoudé sur un tronc habillé d'une draperie. Il tend la main vers la grappe de raisin(?) que le dieu présentait dans sa main dr. Brisure du bras dr. d'H. à la naissance du biceps. Sa main g. tenait un caducée en bronze. Les monnaies d'Anchialos et de Pautalia (392), versées en général au dossier de l'H. de Céphissodote, peuvent aussi bien, et plus vraisemblablement, se comprendre comme des images simplifiées de l'H. de Praxitèle.

3. Autres types plastiques

Petite plastique en bronze

398. H. de Tell Moqdam (Égypte). Anc. coll. Fouquet. – Perdrizet, P., Bronzes grecs d'Égypte de la coll. Fouquet (1911) 30–31 n° 40 pl. 17. – Ép. hellénistique (III<sup>e</sup> s.?). – Statuette de tradition lysippique. H. (ailerons à la tête et aux pieds, le pétale égyptien sur le front) tourne la tête vers l'épaule dr. La main dr. tient une corne d'abondance le long du corps. La main g. écarte la chlamyde qui drapé l'épaule et forme un creux où l'enfant Dionysos a pu se tenir assis, comme sur un petit bronze du Louvre composé selon le même schéma: Smith 107–110; Picard, Manuel IV 2, 262. 265 fig. 112.

399. H. de Roze. Péronne (Somme), Mus. Danicourt. – RA 4, 1884, 73–75 pl. 4. – Bronze gallo-romain de tradition hellénistique. – H. juvénile, de morphologie praxitélienne, entièrement nu, porte sur son bras g. Dionysos drapé aux hanches. Dans sa main dr. il tenait sans doute le caducée que l'enfant cherche à atteindre.

Sur l'iconographie d'H. dionysophore dans l'art gallo-romain, cf. etiam Boucher 115–116; Hatt; Reinach, RépStat II 168–170. 172–173; VI, 30.

Toreutique

400. Manche de patère en bronze. Turin, Mus. Ant. 539. – Rizzo, o. c. 392a, pl. 106, 1; Picard, Manuel IV 2, 263 fig. 111. – Travail alexandrin d'ép. augustéenne. – H., de trois quarts face vers la dr., a posé l'enfant sur une colonnette et lui présente une grappe.

Gemmes

Coiffé du pétase, en chlamyde, pieds nus, le caducée levé, il se retourne vers le groupe qu'il conduit.

Reliefs

589. (= Eurydike I 5a*) Relief en marbre. Naples, Mus. Naz. G 138. - CMV, GrCI fig. 398; Lullies/Hirmer, Plastik pl. 179; Felten, o.c. 524, 59-60 fig. 22. - Copie du début de l'ép. impériale d'après un original des années 420 av. J.-C., parfois attribué à Callimaque (Charbonneaux). - A dr. Orphée (→ Orpheus) se retourne vers Eurydice dont H., à g. de la composition, prend la main pour la reconduire aux Enfers. Le dieu juvénile, les pieds nus, le pétase sur la nuque, est vêtu d'une courte tunique. Noms inscr. L'œuvre fait partie d'un groupe de quatre «Dreifiguren-Reliefs» semblables par le style, dont la destination a été interprétée diversement (ex-voto d'auteurs dramatiques, décor d'un monument funéraire, frise décorant l'entrée de l'enclos de l'autel des Douze Dieux à Athènes: cf. Lullies/Hirmer 97).

590. Stèle fr. en marbre. Honolulu, Acad. of Art 3610. - Début du IV<sup>e</sup> s. av. J.-C. - Sculpté en haut relief, H. juvénile, nu (pétase sur la nuque), de trois quarts profil à g., incline le visage et avance le bras g. fléchi vers le bras levé d'une autre figure (Eurydice?), conservé près de la cassure.

591.* Tambour de base de columna caelata. Londres, BM 1206. De l'Artémision d'Ephèse. - CMV, GrCI fig. 256; Lullies/Hirmer, Plastik 214-215. - Atelier de Scopas? Vers 340 av. J.-C. - Six figures d'identification incertaine. Entre Thanatos et H., une jeune femme retenant ses draperies, peut-être Alceste; les autres personnages pourraient être Héraclès, Perséphone et Hadès. H. de trois quarts face, nu, le bras g. drapé dans la chlamyde, tient de la main dr. le caducée abaissé obliquement vers le sol. La figure est inspirée d'un modèle polyclétéen (pondération, musculature), mais avec le pathétique du visage levé et l'instantané d'un mouvement suspendu.

592. (= Danaïdes 22*, = Herakles 2620 avec bibl.) Frise en calcaire tendre. Munich, Glypt. 494. D'un monument funéraire de Tarente. - AntDenk III 3 (1915) pl. 35; Schefold, SB III 262-263 fig. 375. - Vers 300 av. J.-C. - A g. groupe des Danaïdes; au centre Hadès et Perséphone trônant; à dr., H., le pétase sur la nuque et la chlamyde au vent, le caducée dans la main g. et le bras g. levé, se dirige vers Héraclès (léonté).

2. Hermès, Zeus trônant et diverses figures adventices

719.* (= Eurytion II 15) Amphore. Londres, BM B 157. — CVA 3, pl. 26, 3 a-c. — 550-540 av. J.-C. — A: Zeus, assis au centre sur un trône à col de cygne, le sceptre à la main. H. lui fait face, un long caducée dans la main g., saluant de la main dr. De part et d'autre deux hommes non caractérisés. B: Héraclès et Géryon.

720. Amphore. Bâle, Antikenmus. Lu 19. — Para 65: P. d'Amasis; Berger/Lullies, SlgLudwig I 53 n° 19; v. Bothmer, Amasis n° 6. — 540-530 av. J.-C. — A: Athéna(?), guerriers, jeunes gens. B: H., debout et orienté vers la g., fait face à Zeus trônant avec lequel il s'entretient. Deux porteurs de lances et un éphèbe nu les entourent.

721.* Amphore. Londres, BM B 149. De Vulci. — ABV 245, 60: P. Affecté; Para 110; Mommsen, o. c. 658a, n° 59 pl. 69. — Vers 540 av. J.-C. — A: H., le corps de face, en marche vers la dr., retourne la tête vers Zeus assis sur le trône. Ses bras sont écartés, la main dr. tient le caducée. De chaque côté du groupe, deux hommes dont l'un tient un bâton. B: Dionysos et → Ikarios (I).

722. Sur deux amphores du P. Affecté (540-530 av. J.-C.) H., représenté le corps de face et la tête de profil, effectue le même geste. De la main dr. il salue Zeus et de la g. tient le caducée dont la hampe touche le sol: a) Munich, Antikenslg. 8772. — Para 111, 5; Mommsen, o. c. 658a, n° 26 pl. 30. — A: H. et Zeus, trois figures en longues tuniques dont deux (à g.) portent un sceptre. Celle de dr. serre curieusement le caducée tenu par H. B: Zeus trônant entouré de quatre personnages semblables, tous porteurs de sceptres. Sur le col, A: H. et Zeus trônant encadrés par deux figures seulement. L'attitude du dieu est légèrement différente: le caducée, oblique, est ramené devant la poitrine. B: identique mais le caducée est très incliné et Zeus lève la main g. vers H. — b) Tarente, Mus. Naz. 17235. — Mommsen, o. c. n° 51 pl. 60. — A et B: H. et Zeus. Quatre figures royales ou divines avec sceptre.

723.* Sur la dizaine d'exemplaires répétitifs décorés par le P. Affecté, sur lesquels H. tient le caducée en biais devant sa poitrine et salue Zeus de l'autre main, mentionnons les amphores suivantes (540-530 av. J.-C.): a) Cambridge (Mass.) 2244. — Mommsen, o. c. 658a, pl. 16. — A: H. et Zeus, un enfant nu et deux divinités, dont Poséidon à g. — b)* Gotha, Schloßmus. 45. 759. (= Aphrodite 221/1339a* avec bibl.) AR statères, Mallos (Cilicie), 360-333 av. J.-C. - Av. Athéna assise. Rv. H. debout de face, nu (chlamyde dans le dos), le caducée tenu verticalement dans la main g.; Aphrodite, corps de face et tête de profil, le tient familièrement par l'épaule.

a) Adonis

Vases attiques à f. r.

760.* (= Aphrodite 1331) Cratère en cloche. Baltimore, Walters Art Gall. 48.73. - ARV<sup>2</sup> 1423, 2: P. de Vienne 1089. - Vers 400 av. J.-C. - A: scène incomprise. Peut-être Aphrodite, Eros et Adonis, Perséphone. H. debout à g., un manteau fleuri sur les épaules, tient le caducée à la verticale dans la main dr. et regarde le groupe assemblé devant lui. B: trois jeunes gens.

761.* (= Adonis 11) Pyxide. Würzburg, Wagner-Mus. H 5333. - Simon, E., AntK 15, 1972, 20-26 pl. 5, 1. - Vers 380 av. J.-C. - Aphrodite, Adonis et Eros. H., la main à la hanche et le pied g. surélevé sur un rocher, le pétase ailé rejeté dans le dos, observe la scène. Le caducée, incliné vers le sol, est tenu dans la main g. posée sur la jambe relevée.

762. Cratère à volutes. Genève, coll. P. Sciclou-noff. - Schauenburg, K., RM 91, 1984, 369-370 pl. 110, 1-2: P. de Baltimore; Aellen/Cambitoglou/Chamay, o. c. 438, 26 (pl. coul.). 215. - Vers 340 av. J.-C. - Aphrodite et Perséphone se disputant Adonis. H., dans une large enjambée, le buste de face, lève le caducée au-dessus de sa tête. Cette attitude propre au guide contraste avec l'immobilité des autres figures divines.

b) Antiope

763. (= Antiope I 8, = Epopeus 1) Skyphos att. f. r. Vienne, Kunsthst. Mus. IV 382. - CVA 1, pl. 42, 1 f: manière du P. de Chrysis. - Vers 400 av. J.-C. - Antiope, suivie par Phocos (→ Phokos II), s'élance vers Aphrodite assise. Au registre supérieur H., en partie dissimulé par un rocher, regarde le groupe des femmes: il tient le caducée de biais dans la saignée du coude g. et abaisse le bras dr. vers Antiope.

H. Arès

764. Amphore à col. Londres, BM B 191. De Vulci. - ABV 152, 24: P. d'Amasis; CVA 3, pl. 44, 5a; v. Bothmer, Amasis n° 22. - Vers 540 av. J.-C. - A: guerriers. B: H. de profil regarde Arès et Poséidon.

765.* Trois amphores attribuées au P. Affecté (vers 540 av. J.-C.) réunissent H. et Arès: a)* (= 731b [B]) New York, MMA 07.286.75. D'Orvieto. - ABV 244, 51; Para 110. - A: au centre H., un long caducée dans la main, lève le bras dr. plié en direction d'Arès vers qui il tourne la tête. Des personnages non caractérisés, royaux ou divins, les encadrent. B: H. et Héra. - b) Fr. Florence, Mus. Arch. 94354. - ABV 244, 54-55; Mommsen, o. c. 658a, pl. 108, 98. - Scène identique. - c) Paris, Louvre F 19. - Mommsen, o. c. pl. 25, 26, 18. - A: H. (kibisis) devant un autel, marchant rapidement vers la dr., se retourne vers Arès représenté dans la même attitude. Le long caducée et la lance qu'ils tiennent obliquement forment deux parallèles. Derrière Arès, un hoplite courant entre deux porteurs de lance drapés. B: H. et un chien en compagnie d'Arès, de Poséidon et d'un cavalier menant deux chevaux. Dans le champ, aigle emportant un serpent.

766.* (= Herakles 2177 [A]) Amphore à col. Würzburg, Wagner-Mus. L 199. - ABV 287, 5: Gr. de Würzburg 199 (cercle du P. d'Antiménès). - Vernant, o. c. 95a, 42 fig. 65. - 530-520 av. J.-C. - A: lutte d'Apollon et d'Héraclès pour la biche. B: H. immobile, le caducée en biais dans la main dr., lève la g. en direction d'Athéna et d'Arès figurés au centre. Derrière les divinités guerrières, une jeune femme drapée dans un manteau.

I. Poséidon

I. Hermès et Poséidon

767.* Amphore att. f. n. Tarquinia, Mus. Naz. 681. - CVA 1, pl. 11, 4: P. d'Antiménès. - Vers 530 av. J.-C. - A: H., le caducée à l'horizontale et la main g. levée, trois doigts pointés, converse avec Poséidon qui lui fait face. B: Héraclès citharède et Athéna.

2. Hermès, Poséidon et Amymoné

768. (= Amymoné 81 avec bibl.) Péliké apulienne f. r. Zurich, Univ. 2656. - RVAp 169 n° 31 pl. 55, 3: P. de la Péliké de Moscou; CVA 1, pl. 35, 1-2; 37, 1-6. - Vers 400-380 av. J.-C. - Poséidon et Amymoné assis dans une grotte. H., vu de dos, les observe, le coude g. en appui sur un pilier. Le caducée tenu dans la main dr. paraît posé au creux d'un loutéon placé sur la dr. Différentes divinités étagées autour de ce groupe.

J. Hermès et différentes divinités (scènes isolées)

I. Hestia

769. (= Aphrodite 1501, = Chariklo I 1*, = Hestia 3) Dinos att. f. n., fr. Athènes, Mus. Nat. Acr. 587. De l'Acropole. - ABV 39, 15: Sophilos; Papaspyridi-Karusu, o. c. 529, 112 pl. 51. - Vers 570-560 av.

2. Nérée

770.* Coupe att. f. r. Londres, BM E 9. De Vulci. - ARV 89, 13: P. d'Euegides; Gerhard, AV 179; Krieger, X., Der Kampf zwischen Peleus und Thetis... (1975) pl. 8b. - Vers 500 av. J.-C. - A et B: Thétis et Pélée. H. (inscr. HEPMEE) s'élance, bras dr. levé et caducée en biais, vers Nérée assis sur un thákos et tenant un poisson dans la main g., un bâton dans l'autre.

3. Héphaïstos

771. (= Hephaistos 117*, = Hera 311 avec bibl.) Cratère en calice att. f. r. Paris, Louvre G 162. De Vulci (?) - ARV 186, 47: P. de Kléophradès; CVA 2, pl. 13, 16. - Vers 470 av. J.-C. - A et B: retour d'Héphaïstos dans l'Olympe pour la délivrance d'Héra. H. précède le mulet monté par Héphaïstos et le conduit devant Héra assise sur le trône magique. Penché vers l'avant, le caducée levé dans la main g., H. retourne la tête en direction d'Héphaïstos.

4. Séléné

772. Fr. de cratère att. f. r. Oxford, Ashm. Mus. G 719. De Naucratis. - ARV 1153, 15: P. du Dinos; CVA 2, pl. 66, 25. - Vers 420 av. J.-C. - Sujet inexpliqué. Il peut s'agir de Séléné (visage et voile de tête) et d'H. dont seule l'extrémité du caducée demeure visible sur la g. du tesson.

5. Cybèle (→ Kybele)

773. Relief votif en calcaire. Olbia, Mus. Arch. II b/80. - AA 43, 1928, 90 fig. 9. - Ep. hellénistique. - Cybèle trônant de face, une patère dans la main dr. A sa g., figure féminine dadophore en longue tunique (Hécate?). A sa dr. H. de profil, en tunique courte, le caducée verticalement dans la main g., une oenochoé dans la main dr. le long du corps. Sur ce schéma de la dadophore et du jeune dieu oívochos, cf. Neumann, F., Die Ikonographie der Kybele in der phrygischen und griechischen Kunst, IstanbMitt 28. Beih. (1983) 228-229 et Kat. n° 498 pl. 38, 3: stèle de Milet; Balat, Arch. Mus. 5041.

I. Assemblées assises

Vases attiques à f. n.

775. (= Ares 82*) Hydrie. Bâle, Antikenmus. BS

499. - Verbanck-Piérard, A., dans ImagesSoc (Lausanne) 191 fig. 5: atelier du P. d'Antiménès. - Vers 520 av. J.-C. - Au centre groupe de Zeus et de deux déesses; à g. Athéna et Héraclès face à face; à dr. H. en conversation avec Arès. En chlamyde brodée et pétase à large bord, chaussé de bottes sans ailerons, il paraît tenir obliquement la lance d'Arès (ou la hampe d'un immense caducée?) avec lequel il forme un groupe resserré (leurs sièges sont quasi superposés).

776.* Amphore. Paris, Louvre F 225. D'Etrurie. - CVA 5, pl. 57, 2. 7. - 1<sup>er</sup> quart du V<sup>e</sup> s. av. J.-C. - A: Dionysos assis entre deux groupes de divinités: à g. Athéna et Héraclès (?) face à face sur des diphroi; à dr., sur les mêmes sièges, une déesse assise devant H., mais détournant la tête vers Dionysos. B: Dionysos assis entre deux groupes de Ménades et de Satyres.

777. (= Ganymedes 60*, = Hebe 133, = Hestia 7* - avec renvois et bibl.) Coupe. Tarquinia, Mus. Naz. RC 6848. A: Zeus servi par Ganymède au milieu des dieux (noms inscrits). A g. du groupe central Athéna se retourne vers H.: pétase sur la nuque, bottes ailées, chlamyde brodée, une fleur à la main comme Hébé assise derrière lui. B: Dionysos montant dans un char.

778. (= Aphrodite 1416* avec renvois et bibl., = Astra 26/83) Péliké. Leningrad, Ermitage St. 1793. De Kertch. - ARV 1476, 2: P. d'Eleusis; FR pl. 69; Scheffold, UKV 42 n° 369 pl. 32, 1-3; Metzger, Représentations 268 n° 1 pl. 36, 1; Simon, E., AntK 9, 1966, 73 n. 9 pl. 19, 3. - Vers 350 av. J.-C. - A: aux extrémités de la composition, → Peitho (debout) et Aphrodite (assise) à g.; → Nyx cavalière guidée par Hespéros (?) à dr. Groupe central: assise sur l'omphalos, → Themis-Gaia s'entretient avec Zeus trônant qui va décider le déclenchement de la guerre de Troie pour soulager la Terre surchargée d'hommes (sic Proklos au début des Chants Cypriens); Athéna debout, couronnée par Niké, participe à la discussion. A l'arrière-plan, H. est figuré de trois quarts profil, le pétase sur la nuque, le corps nu (chlamyde rejetée dans le dos), le caducée tenu des deux mains. B: Dionysos assis, entouré par Eros et des Ménades.

779.* (= Dionysos 486* avec bibl., = Dodekathéoi 4a* avec renvois et bibl.) Frise est du Parthénon, plaque IV, n° 24. Londres, BM. - Brommer, F., Die Parthenon-Skulpturen (1979) 36 pl. 99. 101-102; Lullies/Hirmer, Plastik 83-86 pl. 142. - Entre 445 et 438 av. J.-C. - Derrière les héros de la partie g. de la frise, H. est assis près de Dionysos qui s'appuie familièrement contre son dos. La jambe g. avancée, la dr. repliée contre le siège, les hanches drapées, le reste du corps nu, le pétase posé sur la cuisse, il tenait peut-être dans la main dr. un caducée peint (comme Dionysos un thyrsé).

2. Assemblées debout

780. (= Hera 243) Amphore. Paris, Cab. Méd. 229. - ABV 320, 1: Gr. des Trois lignes; CVA 1, pl. 41, 7. - Vers 540 av. J.-C. - A: Zeus assis au milieu de divinités debout: Athéna, Héra, Arès, H. qui est représenté à l'extrémité g. de la scène en tunique courte et manteau, la main g. ouverte et tendue dans un geste de conversation. Noms inscrits au gén. B: départ de guerriers.

781. (= Artemis 1173* avec bibl., = Hestia 6, = Herakles 3387 avec bibl.) Hydrie. Londres, BM B 345. De Vulci. - ABV 332, 20: P. de Priam; CVA 6, pl. 94, 4. - 530-520 av. J.-C. - Deux groupes de quatre divinités. A dr. Apollon citharède et Artémis accompagnée de la biche face à Dionysos et Ariane (?); à g. H. et Maia (?) face à Athéna et Héraclès. Gestes de conversation. Les barbes d'H. et d'Héraclès sont en rehauts blancs.

782. (= Hephaistos 173 avec bibl., = Herakles 3389* avec renvois) Kyathos. Rome, Villa Giulia. De Vulci. - Sign. de Lydos, homonyme du maître de la génération précédente, et proche du gr. du Krokotos: vers 530-520 av. J.-C. - Assemblée de douze divinités et héros, appariés deux par deux. H. (pétase, chitoniskos et himation court, bottes ailées, très long caducée tenu obliquement) forme groupe avec Dionysos vers lequel il se retourne. Pour des assemblées divines sur des kyathoi à f. n., cf. etiam ABV 346, 9; 614, 3; La Coste-Messelière pl. 34, 3-4.

783.* Deux amphores attribuées au P. Affecté (540-520 av. J.-C.) montrent H. dans une attitude particulièrement animée (enjambe, geste de la main) au milieu d'assemblées de personnages mal caractérisés: a)* (= Hephaistos 157c) Angleterre, coll. privée. - Para 111, 25ter; MuM Aukt. 34, pl. 33; Mommsen, o. c. 658a, n° 110 pl. 125. - A: Héphaïstos sur son mulet et autres personnages. B: le caducée dans la main dr., le bras dr. plié, la main g. ouverte et levée, H. fait face à un personnage en manteau court accompagné d'une biche. Derrière ce groupe, personnages discourent (gestes) qui se distinguent par le vêtement long ou court ou par la nudité. - b) Genève, Mus. I 499. - ABV 246, 71; Mommsen, o. c. n° 11 pl. 21. - A et B: H., dans l'attitude du contrepoint dont il est coutumier, entre le groupe Zeus-Héra vers lequel il se retourne à g. et celui de Poséidon flanqué d'un autre personnage. Sur la face A, H. est accompagné d'un chien.

784.* Hydrie. Gotha, Schlossmus. 36. De la région de Calvi-Capoue. - Para 219: proche du P. d'Edimbourg; CVA 1, pl. 30. - Vers 480 av. J.-C. - Divinités debout assemblées autour de Zeus assis sur un diphros. H., représenté derrière Apollon citharède, se retourne vers le groupe latéral g. (Héra et Poséidon?); il est vêtu d'un chitoniskos brodé. Epaule: combat d'hoplites.

785. (= Amphitrite 46*, = Dionysos 603) Hydrie. Paris, Louvre G 41. De Vulci. - ARV 33, 8; 1609: Gr. des Pionniers; CVA 6, pl. 51, 1-5. - 520-510 av. J.-C. - A l'extrémité g. d'une assemblée de dieux appariés par couples (noms inscrits), H.

tourne la tête vers l'extérieur de la frise: main g. levée, bras dr. plié au coude et caducée tenu obliquement dans la main dr., pétase et bottes ailées, chlamyde sur tunique courte.

786. (= Dionysos 604*) Stamnos. Paris, Louvre G 184. De Nola. - ARV<sup>2</sup> 296, 6; 1643: P. de Troilos; CVA 2, pl. 15, 7-8; Philippaki, B., The Attic Stamnos (1964) pl. 26, 4. - 500-475 av. J.-C. - A: H. en chlamyde sur chitoniskos, la main g. levée, le caducée horizontalement dans la main dr., se retourne vers le groupe Dionysos-Poséidon; déesse au bord dr. de la frise, devant H.

Reliefs

787. (= Apollon 868, = Dodekathēoi 20* avec renvois et bibl., = Hephaistos 182, = Hērā 359, = Hestia 15) Bas-relief en marbre. Baltimore, Walters Art Gall. 23.40. D'Italie méridionale. - Havelock, Chr. M., AJA 68, 1964, 57 n. 48; Brommer, Vulkan 49-51; Willers 2, 28; Zagdoun 100-101 n° 80 pl. 28, 105. - Authenticité suspectée (Brommer). Quand on admet l'antiquité du document, sa date est controversée: ce serait la plus ancienne représentation archaïsante du thème (Willers: vers 460); II<sup>e</sup> s. av. J.-C. (Havelock); I<sup>er</sup> s. av.-I<sup>er</sup> s. ap. J.-C. (Palagia O., LIMC II s. v. «Apollon»); plutôt date haute, à cause de la technique et des réminiscences archaïques et sévères (Zagdoun). - A l'extrémité g. de la composition, après le couple Arès-Aphrodite, H. se retourne vers Hestia (?). Coiffé du pétase, l'épaule et le côté g. drapés dans une chlamyde plissée en éventail par-dessus une tunique collante, il tient dans la main g. un minuscule caducée.

788. (= Dodekathēoi 30* avec renvois et bibl. = Hephaistos 183, = Hērā 353, = Hestia 14 avec bibl.) Base de candélabre en marbre dit «autel Borghèse». Paris, Louvre MA 672. - Zagdoun 102 n° 334 pl. 28, 107-109. - II<sup>e</sup> s. ap. J.-C. (?). - Les douze dieux sont distribués sur les trois faces du registre supérieur (au registre inférieur, triades des Charites, des Heures [→ Horai] et des Euménides [→ Erinys]). Sur la face C, à côté du couple Arès-Aphrodite, H. de face, flanqué d'Hestia vers laquelle il tourne la tête; il est figuré en kouros, les pieds joints, le caducée tenu verticalement sur le bras dr., le long du corps nu sur fond de draperie.

3. Cortèges

A l'instar des reliefs de Nymphes (342-355), les scènes se classent en cortèges ou assemblées selon que les compositions sont orientées dans le même sens ou qu'elles s'ordonnent, comme sur les vases attiques, en groupes de figures diversement disposées et appariées.

Pinax attique à f. n.

789.* Fr. de pinax. Athènes, Mus. Nat. Acr. 2494a. De l'Acropole. - Graef/Langlotz I 242 pl. 101 n° 2494a: proche d'Exékias. - Vers 540 av. J.-C. - Assemblée divine. Sur d'autres fr. du pinax: Athéna assise, Dionysos, Léo et l'enfant Apollon (?). H., les cheveux ceints d'un bandeau en rehaut blanc, le caducée obliquement derrière le bras dr. levé, suit un per-sonnage casqué, peut-être Arès. Figures conservées jusqu'aux épaules.

Reliefs

790. Relief votif en marbre. Délos, Mus. A 9. De Délos, Maison du Lac. - Marcadé, MusDélos 292-293 pl. 54; Fuchs, o. c. 117, 48-49; Zagdoun 93-94 n° 170 pl. 20, 79. - 2<sup>e</sup> moitié du II<sup>e</sup> s. av. J.-C.; atelier délien. - H. conduit vers la g. un cortège formé d'Athéna, d'Apollon et d'Artémis. Les cheveux coiffés en chignon, ceints d'un bandeau duquel tombent des parotides tressées, la chlamyde répartie en deux pans à bordures en zigzag, il avance d'un pas vif en présentant son petit caducée serré verticalement entre le pouce et l'index. Dans le haut du champ frise de bucranes et festons de guirlande.

Le relief de la Villa Albani, Mus. Torlonia 988 (Helbig<sup>4</sup> 237 n° 3261 [Fuchs, W.]; Zagdoun 93-94 n° 433 pl. 20, 81) est une réplique de la fin de l'ép. républicaine, mais la guirlande est omise et la procession se dirige vers un autel.

4. Hermès recevant une libation, un sacrifice ou une offrande

816. a)* Lécythe. Cambridge, Fitz. Mus. GR 30-1937. - ARV<sup>2</sup> 993, 81: P. d'Achille; CVA 2, pl. 13, 4. - Vers 450 av. J.-C. - H. de trois quarts face (chlamyde, bottes sans ailerons), le caducée pointé vers le sol, tourne la tête vers une femme (Hébé?) qui lui présente une phiale. - b)* Oenochoé. Athènes, Mus. Nat. 14502. D'Attique. - ARV<sup>2</sup> 1256, 10: proche du P. de Disney; Add 177; Lezzi-Hafter, A., Der Schuwalow-Maler (1976) 114 E 8 pl. 151 a-b. - Vers 420 av. J.-C. - Le caducée pointé vers le sol dans la main g., H. (sandales sans ailerons, la chlamyde recouvrant les genoux) tend la phiale vers une femme munie de l'oenochoé et faisant le geste nuptial de l'anakalypsis. Un lit est figuré à l'arrière-plan: cf. 887).

817.* Cratère en calice. Boston, MFA 03.796. - Caskey/Beazley III 75 n° 165 pl. 24: proche du Washington P. - Vers 425 av. J.-C. - A: dans un sanctuaire (aux murs deux pinakes et une représentation d'Hermès: cf. 98), un éphèbe chevauche un bouc qu'il conduit devant H. Le dieu, en pétase et sandales ailées, drapé dans une chlamyde qui lui recouvre les genoux et le bras g. (y compris la main), le caducée horizontalement dans la main dr., est figuré de trois quarts profil, observant le groupe. Prélude d'un sacrifice à H.? Mythe de Phrixos? B: éphèbe drapé avec un bâton.

818. Deux scènes difficiles à localiser et à interpréter montrent H. dans la compagnie de femmes: a) Péliké. Marché de l'art (Christie 1979). - Schauenburg, K., MededRome 44-45, 1983, 49 et n. 69 pl. 19, 41: P. de Créüse. - 1<sup>er</sup> quart du IV<sup>e</sup> s. av. J.-C. - A: H., en pétase et manteau court, pieds nus, appuyé sur son caducée, tend une couronne à une jeune femme qui lui fait face munie d'une phiale et d'une oenochoé. Entre les deux figures un panier d'ouvrage et une stèle. - b) Hydrie. Policoro, Mus. Nat. 1203. - Vers 370 av. J.-C. - A: H. (hanches drapées, sandales sans ailerons, pétase) est assis de trois quarts profil à g. sur un rocher (?), son caducée posé à côté de lui. Une femme avec un grand plateau chargé d'offrandes s'approche. Stèle entre les deux personnages. B: scène de gynécée.

819. Calcaire. Argos, Mus. D'Argos, angle S E de l'agora. - Vollgraff, W., BCH 44, 1920, 222 fig. 2. - Ep. classique? - H., en pétase et sandales ailées, vêtu d'un chitoniskos, l'épaule et le bras g. drapés dans la chlamyde, est représenté de trois quarts profil à dr., la main dr. à la hanche. Il prend appui sur un pilier de la main g. qui tient le caducée. Devant lui une petite fille suivie d'une femme; la première écarte ses bras baissés, la seconde porte peut-être des offrandes dans ses mains qui soulèvent devant elle ses draperies.

5. Hermès sacrifiant un bouc

819bis.* Cratère en cloche paestan f. r. Paris, Louvre K 238. - RVP 162, 300 pl. 106a: Python; Villard, Fr., Les vases grecs (1956) 83 pl. 30. - Vers 350 av. J.-C. - H. de trois quarts face, la tête couronnée, le caducée sous le bras, une couronne et une corbeille dans la main g., conduit vers un autel un bouc qu'il tient par les cornes. A l'arrière-plan, Satyre émergeant à mi-corps.

6. Hermès contrefaisant un sacrifice

820.* Coupe att. f. r. Vienne, Kunsth. Mus. IV 3691. De Cerveteri. - ARV<sup>2</sup> 118,8; 1627: P. d'Epidromos; Studniczka, F., Jdl 6, 1891, 258-269; 7, 1892, 144-150; CVA 1, pl. 2, 4-6; Simon, E., Opfernde Götter (1953) 94; Zanker (1965) 33-34; Siebert, o. c. 255, pl. I. - 510-500 av. J.-C. - H., solennellement drapé dans un long manteau d'où dépasse seulement l'aile d'une de ses sandales, avance vers un autel, le caducée oblique, la barbe haute, aux côtés d'une victime sacrificielle. Mais celle-ci est un chien déguisé en porc! Le déguisement toutefois n'inclut ni la tête, ni la queue, ni les pattes en sorte que cet «Opferbetrug» est une farce (pas nécessairement d'origine théâtrale) instantanément reconnaissable (Studniczka). Le paquetage d'athlète figuré dans le champ est peut-être (mais pourquoi dans ce contexte?) une allusion à H. énagônios.

C. Diverses scènes de sanctuaire

821.* Pinax att. f. n., fr. Athènes, Mus. Nat. Acr.

822. (= Artemis 103b) «Vase de Sosibios». Cratère à reliefs en marbre. Paris, Louvre MA 442. D'Italie. - Moreno, P., EAA VII (1967) 412 s. v. «Sosibios»; Zagdoun n° 331 pl. 23, 89. - 1<sup>er</sup> s. av. J.-C. - H., en tunique courte, un pan de draperie retombant dans le dos, nu-tête, lève la main dr. devant un autel embrasé. Vis-à-vis, Artémis armée de son arc retient de la main g. un cerf dressé sur ses pattes. Cf. etiam la réplique de Leninabad (U.R.S.S.): Litvinsky, B. A./Tursunov, N.
